A GOWN OF ANGER

by Jannett Highfill

The winter wears its sunshine like a proud and useless jacquard-woven counterpane.
A feeble snow erodes the long unplowed unterraced fields. A California rain invades, and soon the scrape of topsoil down to the frost-line turns to mud. Everything is layered and thin in winter, gray, brown, and umber. And now the hibernating bear in me shivering in the pale conceits of my cloak of fat and gown of anger wakes and snarls and assumes the rank deceits and shifts of the hunt, then tastes the bitter air of spring. But will anything happen?
Winter wears even rage a trifle thin.
