Further Up And Further In

by

Meg Moseman

So far, there is always a walled garden overgrown with undiscovered fruit hidden within the garden whose apples we know

and an indigo sky
arching
fathomless
beyond the stars
I shiver before
tonight.

So far, no story ever ends,

the horror
(says dream)
at the root of the growing world.

The savor of the apple could sate this heart for a century, but cattish dream knows no satisfaction,
not inside, not out,
not in passion fruit, not in rest,
not in the infinite.
