Vice president leaves UCF for retirement after 28 years

Longtime administrator John Bolte ended a productive and distinguished career with UCF upon his resignation Oct. 1 as vice president for Administration and Finance, a position he held for 10 years. Bolte previously had served as associate vice president for Academic Affairs for 14 years and assistant and associate dean for Academic Affairs and director of Liberal Studies for four years. When Bolte joined the university in 1968 during its first year of classes, he was also a physics professor.

During a reception in recognition of Bolte's retirement last month, numerous faculty and staff members attended and presented Bolte with mementos commemorating their years of working with him.

President John Hitt read from a letter to Bolte thanking him for his "decades of dedicated and effective service." Hitt praised Bolte for his tireless work for UCF: "I did not know how much I would come to depend on you for quiet and effective assistance in navigating the currents of policy and politics in our complex system of higher education in Florida. We will all miss your wealth of knowledge and experience. Those of us who have worked closely with you will miss most the sure conviction that you care deeply about UCF and will defend our university's integrity at all cost."

In reviewing his 28 years at UCF, Bolte considers his more significant accomplishments to be the development of "a reasonable, rational and well documented methodology for the allocation of financial resources at the state, systemwide and university levels; the leadership in the State University System in implementing computing technologies, such as computerized registration and image processing; and the creation of a campus master plan that creates the most scenic, and environmentally sensitive campus in the system."

Bolte is also proud of building "the most effective administration and finest team in the SUS."

His position as vice president included the coordination and administration of state, contract, grant and auxiliary budgets in excess of $220 million. He prepared the annual legislative budget request and operating budget and interacted with state and local legislators on a regular basis. He supervised the Computing Center, the Office of Institutional Research, the Budget Office, the Office of Finance and Accounting, the Office of Personnel Services and the Business Services Division.

Over the years, he has stayed active in institutional studies and analyses. He has regularly presented papers at national and state meetings of the Association for Institutional Research and was a member of the local arrangements committee for the

Internationally known alum to display artworks at UCF gallery

UCF alum and mystic artist of national and international acclaim, Jamali, will exhibit his art in the UCF Visual Arts Building's Gallery. The show, "Jamali's Surfaces," opens Friday, Oct. 20, with a reception at 7 p.m. and will remain on display until Dec. 1. New York Times critic William Zimmer is the curator for the exhibition.

Donald Kuspit, one of America's most distinguished art critics, will lecture on the exhibit on Nov. 9, at 4 p.m., in the gallery. Kuspit is the winner of the College Art Association's Frank Jewett Mather Award for Distinction in Art Criticism.

Jamali, a native of the West Himalayas, a formative five years among the Sufis of the Rajasthan desert. The Sufis' silent, ecstatic dancing is central to their mystically oriented culture. Jamali credits the memories of their Dervish dances as being the inspiration for his unique painterly technique. Jamali's art, which is characterized by very lush and layered surfaces, is created mostly with his feet. As he performs trance-like dance movements, similar to those of the Sufis, he combines paint, sand, leaves, twigs, household debris—even an occasional insect—into striking images.

Like the Sufis' dances, each of Jamali's paintings is created for a common purpose: to capture the metaphysical.

"My art does not stem from outside inspiration," said Jamali. "It comes from within. It reflects a

MEMORANDUM

To: UCF community
From: Michelle Humphries, Department of Environmental Health and Safety
Subject: Extension cords

As many of you probably already know, the inspector for the Florida State Fire Marshal has been surveying the campus buildings lately. In his travels it has come to our attention that we may need to share some information on the proper use of extension cords and other outlet expanding devices. In the areas for engineering, education, and health and physics alone, he cited over 45 separate locations at which there were unapproved wiring methods.

Extension cords are not permitted as permanent wiring at any time. We are, however, permitted to use surge suppressor strips (the kind with a little light and fuse that you may already be using for your computer). These must plug directly to a wall outlet, and your equipment must then plug directly into the suppressor. All suppressors are to be UL listed and bear the UL symbol.

The following are some of the items that are not approved and will be required to be removed if found:

- Three-way outlet splicers (the little box that makes one plug into three);
- Outlet boxes (usually a silver box with four plugs on top and a long black cord);
- Home extension cords (usually brown or white lightweight cords); and
- Heavy duty extension cords (when not being used temporarily).

The wires should be free of tape and splices and the insulation free of worn spots. Cords should not be run under carpeting or desk mats.

Most of the cords can be replaced with a surge suppressor purchased from your campus office supply store. If additional outlets are needed, an alterations and improvements request may be filed with Physical Plant.

Please share this information with others in your office. If you have a question or concern, please contact the fire safety officer at 823-2338 or PROFS: HUMPHRIE.

Partnership Story

UCF lends its expertise to help commercialize campus technologies with local company

With an assist from UCF, the Central Florida Innovation Corp. officially opened for business last month to help commercialize technologies developed in university, federal and industry laboratories.

Diane Jacobs, vice president for research and graduate studies, represented UCF at the ribbon cutting and check presentation ceremony at CFIC offices in the Central Florida Research Park. The CFIC was created with about $1 million in private and public funding to provide technologically focused entrepreneurs or small businesses with advice, expertise and start-up capital. UCF provided $50,000 in the form of a contract to assess commercial applications for technologies developed at UCF.

Speaking at the ceremony, Jacobs said that the CFIC dedication "adds an important component to the larger research enterprise anchored at the University of Central Florida." Last year's $37 million in sponsored research, she said, helped introduce undergraduate students to research activities and gave graduate students the opportunity to gain hands-on research experience they will need in their careers.

Referring to UCF's Center for Research and Education in Optics and Lasers, the Institute for Simulation and Training and the Florida Solar Energy Center, Jacobs said those centers have forged strong relationships with area businesses.

"These partnerships are of mutual benefit," she noted. "Faculty and students are stimulated and challenged to develop solutions to practical problems, which usually results in more questions of a fundamental nature, and the technological basis of the business is strengthened by the expertise of our faculty."

Strategic Planning Council set for status reports

UCF strategic plan progress will be previewed on Nov. 15 at open session of the Strategic Planning Council.

The meeting, scheduled at 3 p.m. tentatively in the University Dining Room, will feature status reports by SPC task force chairs on the external and internal realities the university must deal with, as well as issues of institutional vision and values. (See box for task force subjects and chairs.) Completion of the reports, which assess the environment in which UCF must operate, is a first step in the drafting of an institutional strategic plan.

The task forces are reviewing prior reports and data on forces affecting UCF's operation. They are to report on UCF's comparative advantages, opportunities and threats, and campus climate. Each academic program and all administrative services and functions will be reviewed.

"The task forces are working in an open, iterative process, which involves multiple opportunities for feedback and input for the entire university community," said Stephen Rice, SPC chair. Each task force, he said, is drafting preliminary reports and position papers and then seeking reaction from faculty members, staff, students and friends of the university. The task forces have set up electronic newsgroups to facilitate reaction. For information, call 823-6197.

UCF's third annual Diversity Week started off with a bang—literally and figuratively. The kick-off ceremony on Monday, Sept. 25 at the Reflecting Pond was a colorful display of the campus' diversity.

UCF's steel drum band, Black Steel, performed for a half an hour leading up to the official celebration. A fanfare by a UCF trumpet ensemble marked the opening and was followed by a rifle salute by the Army ROTC and the showing of colors by the Air Force ROTC Color Guard. A procession of individuals from a variety of clubs, organizations and departments encircled the Reflecting Pond, carrying signs and banners identifying their affiliations, some decked out in native dress and others in their occupational outfits.

A Scottish bagpiper and two Native Americans—Black Hawk and his 3-year-old son, Young Eagle, the grandson and great grandson of Apache Chief Geronimo—led the procession.

Members of the campus and dignitaries from the community were told by President John Hitt that the fifth goal that he had set forth upon his arrival on campus in 1992—to build a diverse and inclusive campus—was essential in meeting his four other goals.

"You can't provide the best undergraduate education without being diverse, without offering students the kinds of experiences that reflect our diverse world," Hitt said. "The same is true of our goals of achieving international prominence, providing international focus in our programs and building partnerships with a community that is becoming increasingly diverse."

Valarie Greene King, director of the Office of Diversity Initiatives, and her office staff were assisted by the Diversity Programming committee, chaired by Martha Bell, education professor. The committee, which had been working on the event since April, established the theme: "Free Your Mind: Understanding Dimensions of Diversity" and decided to start the week off with two established and highly successful events—the International Fair and the Kaleidoscope of International Cultures, which were created and organized by Joanna McCully, coordinator of International Student Services.

The fair drew hundreds of participants who sampled cuisine from a variety of countries and visited tables with displays and literature from dozens of countries from around the world. A fashion show of international dress and live entertainment—with music and dancers—added to the festive atmosphere.

The Kaleidoscope was a more elaborate display of fashion, dances and music by community groups, which included Irish step dancing, Portuguese folk dancing, songs and music of Latin America, Arabic dances, a Caribbean carnival costume revue, classical Indian music and dances, and cultural African dances.

In the previous two years, Diversity Week had a more educational focus, according to King. But this year, the committee added more entertaining events, also.

"This year's experience reminds me of what a university should be," King said. "We had people coming together for the fun and festivities and coming together out of intellectual curiosity. Our discussion panels and our great debate got people involved in thinking about the issues of diversity. This was the best atmosphere that I've seen on a campus in a long time."

The panel discussions explored such topics as affirmative action and what it has and hasn't accomplished; UCF's diversity status; diverse religions and their common base; the realities of how gender affects women faculty; and the scientific and technological achievements of people of African descent.

There were also two diversity workshops, a lecture on the international state of affairs and the great diversity debate, which featured two faculty members from the Communications Department, Jeff Butler and Patrick Jablonski, who are known for their debating accomplishments.

A wheel chair "obstacle" course gave participants an opportunity to experience the problems that every day tasks present to the person in a wheel chair.

"It was presented as a fun event, and it was until I couldn't get through an ordinary door," King

A number of displays and art exhibits in various locations on campus added to the week's theme.

"For me, the value in this week has been not only the excellence of all the events," King said, "but the increased participation this year. And we had people we didn't even know walk into our office and volunteer their help."

A Celebration of Differences

said. "It really opened your mind to the difficulties that people in wheel chairs encounter."

Comedienne Geri Jewell, the first person with a disability to be cast in a TV series ("The Facts of Life") added humor to the week and a number of local religious and community groups performed a variety of gospel and cultural music.

The week ended with Children's Day, which brought children, their teachers, counselors and parents from UCF Partnership Schools on campus to learn about diversity through specially planned activities.

Members of the Portuguese-American Club of Orlando demonstrated a folk dance at the Kaleidoscope of International Cultures.

Right, during the opening ceremony, President John Hitt presented a certificate of participation to Black Hawk and his son, Young Eagle. Also on hand are, left, Martha Bell, chair of the Diversity Programming committee, and Valarie Greene King, director of the Office of Diversity Initiatives. Below, representatives from a number of clubs, organizations and offices participated in the procession of diversity.

The Caribbean-American Association presented a Caribbean carnival revue during the Kaleidoscope of International Cultures.

Left, Martha Bell, chair of the Diversity Programming committee, and, right, Valarie Greene King, director of the Office of Diversity Initiatives, congratulated UCF student Janet Panka who co-designed the logo for Diversity Week. Not shown is Montegue Watkins from the Soldiers to Scholars program who worked with Panka on the design.

Appointments and Activities

Steve Atkinson, professor, Department of Finance, will have his article, "Gaming Stocks? Hot or Not?" published in the Journal of Hospitality Financial Management.

Mark Hall, director of the Student Union, has been elected a member of the Board of Directors of the National Association for Campus Activities. Hall will participate in the implementation and review of goals, procedures and actions of the association. He is a member of all board standing committees, which includes affirmative action, finance, publications review, rules and strategic planning committees. As part of his duties, he will also serve on the NACA Educational Foundation, which develops and delivers educational programs and services for college and university students, professional staff and others in the field of campus activities.

Katherine Keller, English professor, was selected as the director of University Honors at UCF following a national search. Keller, who had been chair of the University Honors committee, had served as interim director of University Honors and Scholars Program since July 1994. Keller founded and coordinated the Honors in English program.

Keith Koons, associate professor, Department of Music, performed on the clarinet several times in Europe in June. He performed Carolyn Bremer's "Sonata for Clarinet and Piano" and Douglas Ovens' "Two American Songs" at the College of Music Society International Conference in Berlin. He also performed a recital on clarinet and bass clarinet and gave two master classes at the State Conservatory in Bratislava, in Slovakia. In addition, he gave a master class at the State Conservatory in Kosice in eastern Slovakia, and performed in Bardjovske Kupele and Budimir.

Sarah Pappas, director of the UCF Daytona Beach Campus, was recently appointed by the City Commission of Daytona Beach to serve on an Economic Development Steering Committee. The committee is being asked to develop a plan that will guide the future of the city of Daytona Beach as it relates to economic development and expansion of the tax base. Pappas will seek information from resident faculty members at Daytona Beach Campus to contribute innovative ideas to the city plan. She sees this opportunity as an example of how faculty and staff can contribute to their regions with partnerships.

Abe Pizam, professor, Department of Hospitality Management, was awarded the John Wiley & Sons Award by the Council on Hotel, Restaurant and Institutional Education. This award recognizes a CHRIE member who has made lifetime contributions to outstanding scholarship and research in hospitality and tourism.

Karen Richter, a former star player and now the head women's soccer coach, was recently named as an assistant coach for the USA Olympic Development Region II soccer teams. Richter, who began her third year as head coach at UCF, traveled with the team to the National Camp at Ohio State University. She will also travel with the team to the national tournament in Boca Raton in November. Since 1993, Richter has led the Golden Knights to a 21-12-2 overall record and two Trans America Athletic Conference titles. The USA Olympic Development Program currently divides the country into four regions. Each region then selects a team comprised of the top players from state teams. The four teams are then trained and evaluated before a national team in each age group (under 19 and under 16) are selected.

David Scott, executive director of the Dr. Phillips Institute for the Study of American Business Activity, will publish a Malaysian edition of his text, "Guide to Financial Analysis," which he wrote with a colleague. His texts have previously been translated into Spanish and Estonian.

Suggestion Of The Month

Richard Turkiewicz, director of the Police Department, was the winner of the Suggestion of the Month Contest for May. He suggested that law enforcement officers be able to receive salary in lieu of taking two weeks of the vacation time. Although his idea cannot be adopted, he received a prize for his idea.

spiritual view of existence. My knowledge of a transcendent ground of existence is what informs all of my work."

Jamali received a degree in studio art from UCF in 1980. He later attended the University of Florida and received a master's degree in fine arts degree in painting. Upon graduation from UF, he moved to New York City to launch his career. Less than two years later, he was featured on Madison Avenue in his first one-man show.

national meeting of AIR held in Orlando in 1986.

"I have a strong commitment to systematic planning and consider accurate, consistent data and well-designed research studies to be a major component of good planning and good decision making," Bolte said. "I have several years of experience in enrollment planning within the university and on statewide committees for the 10 campuses of the SUS."

Bolte and a colleague collaborated on a book and workshop on long-range planning and resource allocation procedures. They conducted three national workshops on the subject.

Bolte's career also included teaching science and mathematics for eight years in high school and physics for eight years at the University of Iowa and San Diego State University. He was named Outstanding Professor in 1966 at San Diego State University. He also received National Science Foundation Awards in 1958 and 1956-57, and a faculty fellowship at the Goddard Space Flight Center in 1966 and 1967.

Bolte received a B.A. and M.A. from the University of Northern Iowa, a M.S. from Oklahoma State University and a Ph.D. in physics from the University of Iowa.

He and his wife, Marian, live in Maitland. They have three children, Mike, John and Becky.

The following poem was composed by Judy Monroe, assistant director of Administration and Finance, and her husband George. She read it at the retirement reception. Monroe worked with Bolte since 1971. The poem, titled "The Ballad of John Bolte" recounts Bolte's long history with the university.

Now listen, my friends, and you shall hear
Of a man with vision and a distinguished career.
On the fifteenth of January Nineteen Sixty Eight
John Bolte signed up to work for the State.

He started downtown, no campus in sight
Over a drugstore he slaved day and night.
He toiled in that place hoping he would prevail
Then moved up out East to Alafaya Trail.

The campus was new all shiny and bright
Ten thousand pines, not a student in sight.
His job was immense to build the whole place
But he took on the challenge, a smile on his face.

He said to us all, "Now let's get down to work!"
We'll make of this school the best one on earth.
The students they came and John taught them physics
But when "streaking" was vogue—well that really did it!

Administration called and there he did stay
Safe at last so he thought, no strange problems today.
He looked out the window of his big office suite
Stared down at his campus and thought "this is neat!"

Then one fine spring day choppers flew through the sky
The secret service swooped down and Nixon dropped by.
He stood by the pond, wiped a tear from his lid
Told the crowd "I won't quit!" But, of course, then he did.

The days they rolled by and the years they did too.
The vision was lofty for dear FTU.
Millican charged us to "Reach for the Star"
But there never was room to park all those cars.

As the Rockets took off we became the place
To bring forth the brains to win the space race.
When the Cape days went bust, we paused for reflection
The times they had changed so we altered direction.

"Let's try a new name," Colbourn said with a vision

No one knows who we are or what is our mission?
So a new name it is, UCF it will be
No more FTU who? what? where?..wait, you'll see.

Bolte's staff they grew older. Age showed on their faces.
A new Pres came down from Maine of all places!
John showed Hitt the ropes and told him his plight
And together they vowed to fight the good fight.

They took on the Regents and fought the State Reps.
They squeezed every dollar from the heights to the depths.
No grant was too big, no trust fund too small
Their mission was clear—Gainesville can't have it all!

Trying times these have been for our mighty crusader
But he always stood firm, making UCF greater.
He's fought hail, and bats, and cats so aloof
Even legionella showed up on the roof.

Oh, we may not be Harvard, or Yale or Cal Tech
But we sure have earned Bobby Bowden's respect!
Our football's IA, our students are great
Our campus is lovely and clearly first rate.

Now we say fond farewell to our friend and our boss
Give his back to dear Marian, her gain is our loss.
History speaks for itself, so I guess we'll just let it

University publication receives statewide award of excellence

The UCF Alumni Association's magazine Pegasus received the 1995 Silver Award for Best New Magazine from the Florida Magazine Association in August.

Pegasus is published by the Alumni Association and Knight Images Design and Marketing Inc. with support provided by the UCF Office of Public Affairs.

The Silver Award represents second place. Mutual Funds Magazine received the Charlie Award for first place in the Best New Magazine category and Honeymoon Magazine received a Bronze Award for third place. Judging was based on overall excellence: writing, design and photography.

The first issue of Pegasus, which has a circulation of 60,000, appeared in July 1994. It is published six times a year.

The Florida Magazine Association was established in 1953 and is the largest state magazine association in the nation with 225 magazines represented.
