UCF researchers seek solutions for cybersickness

Spending too much time in the artificial world of virtual reality can cause real down-to-earth woes, warn UCF professors who are searching for cybersickness causes and cures.

As computer-generated, reality-mimicking simulations in games and entertainment, training and medicine become more popular, a downside to virtual reality technology has become increasingly evident to researchers in the field. Virtual reality exposure can cause nausea, dizziness and lack of coordination with potentially harmful consequences well after the experience is over.

"Suddenly becoming dizzy and disoriented is a dangerous condition to be in if you have to drive a car after a virtual reality exposure or engage in any behavior where cybersickness can put you at risk," says Kay Stanney, engineering professor and leading cybersickness researcher.

Stanney is personally familiar with the case of a youth who played a new portable virtual reality game for the good part of a day and then switched to the real world game of pool. He found himself sticking the cue in his eye because his senses were calibrated to the virtual world he had just left. The example raises concerns, Stanney says, over youths who spend hours playing virtual world arcade games and then jump on a bike or get behind the wheel of a car for the trip home.

The motion sickness symptoms are thought to arise, Stanney says, from a breakdown between what one's senses have been conditioned to expect and environmental feedback that does not match expectations. Using the sense of sight as an example, she explains that a person's vision is keyed to the real-time movements of the everyday world when someone first enters a virtual world. No matter how well executed, virtual motion scenes are never as perfect as real ones. As a result, Stanney says, cyberspace travelers often feel motion sick until the body and mind adapt to the visual cues in that imperfectly moving virtual world.

The greater problems occur when the virtual reality trek ends, because the senses must then readapt to real world feedback, causing such physiological aftereffects as degraded hand-eye coordination, unsteadiness and blurred vision. These conditions can last until sensory recalibration is completed.

Stanney and an adjunct human factors psychology professor, Robert S. Kennedy, also a vice president with Essex Corp., are conducting experiments to better measure the lingering physiological effects of VR exposure. Kennedy has completed

Research Pavilion refinanced with low interest rates

Taking advantage of low interest rates, the UCF Foundation Inc. has issued bonds with a blended taxable and tax exempt rate of 3.89 percent to refinance its Research Pavilion building in the Central Florida Research Park.

The issuance of $7.45 million in bonds through the Orange County Industrial Development Authority will result in interest savings of about $175,000 annually at current rates, said Roberta Byrum, foundation controller. The bonds are backed by a letter of credit from SunTrust Bank, which is secured by a mortgage on the facility. This refinancing releases the previous pledge on endowment investments.

The bonds are due in 2016. Seventy percent of the issue went to market on Feb. 8 with a tax exempt rate of 3.2 percent. The remainder carried a taxable rate of 5.5 percent.

Former police commissioner shares experiences as professor

When speaking to Elsie Scott, the former New York Police Department deputy police commissioner for training, you will find she brings much in the way of practical and personal experience to her new position as a criminal justice professor at UCF.

Scott, who resigned from the NYPD to teach at UCF, was first asked to head up the police department's training division by Lee Brown, a man she credits as being instrumental in the careers of several high-ranking female police officials, such as Beverly Harvard, Atlanta's chief-of-police; Penny Harrington, former chief-of-police in Portland, Ore.; and Elizabeth Watson, former chief-of-police for Houston and now chief-of-

police in Austin, Texas

Scott was approached by Brown, then police commissioner for the NYPD, who was impressed with her expertise in community policing. She had developed effective techniques for implementing community policing programs while serving as executive director of the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives.

Community policing involves training police officers to work with citizens on projects or goals that will help better communities. The projects are designed to foster closer relationships between officers and the people in the communities they serve. As police

MEMORANDUM

To: University community
From: Sharon Ekern, Purchasing Office
Subject: Payments to vendors

Last month, if you will recall, UCF had a problem with Office Depot in which they temporarily closed our account. This month, we have had the same problem with Builders Square, and our account with it was closed there as well. It has subsequently been reopened; however, we will see ourselves in the same situation once again if invoices from vendors are not processed by the departments.

In both instances, the closing of our account was due to unpaid invoices. When a department purchases items from these vendors or any vendor and receives an invoice, that invoice should be forwarded immediately to the Finance and Accounting Division for payment.

It can be an embarrassing moment for members of a department when they arrive at a retail outlet only to be told that they cannot purchase their selected items because "UCF has not paid their bills." But neither the Purchasing Office nor the Finance and Accounting Division can help if the invoices are not submitted in a timely manner.

Please do your part in helping us maintain these accounts, so that you are not the one placed in an embarrassing situation. Thanks.

Subject: Accountability for controlled substances and tax-free alcohol

Faculty and staff who are authorized to possess and use federally controlled substances and tax-free alcohol are responsible for maintaining accurate records of receipt and usage of these chemicals. This is to remind you that records of possession and use are subject to federal audit on demand with no advance notice.

The Environmental Health and Safety Office is the delegated authority for the licenses and any conditions set forth by the licenses for these substances. Purchase orders must be approved by Steve Mammino, industrial hygienist, prior to processing the requisition through the Purchasing Office. Limited purchase orders may not be used.

Thank you in advance for your cooperation in this matter. If you have any questions or need information, please call Steve Mammino at 823-6302.

THIS ISSUE:

This issue of The UCF Report is for the weeks of March 8-14 and March 15-21. It is the 16th issue of fiscal year 1995-96.

WHAT HAPPENED THEN:

March 19, 1967 — The groundbreaking ceremony for the university is held.

March 7, 1969 — The Board of Regents authorizes the university's athletic program.

WHAT'S HAPPENING NOW:

■ UCF was named several times in the eighth annual "Best of Florida Schools" issue of the Florida Leader magazine (March). The issue features the best of everything at Florida colleges and universities. UCF was named the "Most Physically Fit Student Body," "Best College for a Film Career," "Best Living Lab" for the Arboretum and "Best Greek Life." Florida Leader is a statewide, student-oriented magazine, which was recognized by the Florida Education Association and the Florida Teacher's Professional—National Education Association as one of the best college magazines in the nation.

■ CAB and the International Student Association are hosting a fashion show, "Fashion Dream, A Rainbow of Styles," on Saturday, March 23, at 8 p.m. in the Student Center Auditorium. It will feature over 50 students from over 25 countries with fashions from such stores as The Gap, Banana Republic, County Seat, The Surf Shop, Express and local independent designers, including UCF alumnus Kuljit Singh of Originals. The show is open to the public and free to UCF students, faculty and staff. There is a $2 charge for all others and receipts will be donated to UNICEF.

■ Daytona Beach campus is again sponsoring an 11-day course in England for nurses in R.N. and B.S.N. programs. In London, students will shadow nurses at the historic St. Bartholomew and Princess Alexandra & Newham College of Nursing & Midwifery, attend lectures and workshops, and examine roles of various practitioners within the British health care system. Students will be able to analyze and compare the strengths and weaknesses in the country's approach to health care and consider options that might improve health care in the U.S. A tour of the Florence Nightingale Museum in London is also scheduled. For information, call Joanne Ogburn at (904) 255-7423.

■ CORRECTION: In the Friday, Feb. 23 issue of The UCF Report, page 3, the photograph should have been of Lawrence Otis Graham, but instead showed Dennis Rahim Watson, an educator and author, who spoke on campus as part of the Minority Students Welcome Back celebration. The event was sponsored by the Minority Student Services, the African-American Student Union and CAB.

UPCOMING HOLIDAYS:

The next holiday will be on Monday, May 27, for Memorial Day. This will be a universitywide holiday.

Nobel Prize winner to speak in math series

Joseph Taylor Jr., a Nobel Prize winner in physics, will visit UCF as the next speaker in the Mathematics Distinguished Lecture Series. He will speak Wednesday, March 20, at 3:30 p.m. in Phillips Hall, room 409, on "Binary Pulsars and Einstein's Gravity, Layman's Guide to a Modern Astrophysical Experiment." This lecture, which is free and open to the public, is intended for all science and engineering students and faculty.

Taylor's second lecture, titled "Pulsars, Clocks and Gravity," will be held on Thursday, March 21, at 11:30 a.m. at the same location.

Taylor is the James S. McDonell Distinguished University Professor of Physics at Princeton University. He received a B.A. in physics honors and a Ph.D. in physics from Harvard University. He has made deep and seminal contributions to modern astrophysics and radio astronomy. As one of the best astrophysicists of this century, Taylor has received numerous honors and awards. He is a member of several prestigious organizations and societies in the U. S. and abroad, including the National Academy of Sciences.

This distinguished lecture series is funded by the Strategic Planning Council and sponsored by the College of Arts and Sciences and the Departments of Physics, Philosophy, Economics, and Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering.

studies that show that cybersickness nausea and dizziness subside once the senses calibrate to VR environments over the course of repeated exposures. He also found an unfortunate trade-off. As sickness subsided, post-exposure disorientation and other aftereffects that can compromise safety intensified.

Working with a UCF graduate student, Stanney also has demonstrated that the degree of control users have over their movements in a virtual environment influences how likely they are to become sick. The finding is analogous, Stanney says, to a family's experience with car sickness, where passengers are more likely to be sickened than the driver.

Another engineering professor, Chin Lee, is preparing to launch experiments where 50 students will drive a simulated car through twists and turns at 35 miles in a virtual environment. He will collect data on the incidence of cybersickness among drivers who have different degrees of freedom of movement as they "tool" around the cyberspace course.

While researchers seek to definitively pin down the causes and mechanisms of cybersickness, Stanney offers some tentative advice based on research already in hand on how to minimize the malady or to speed recovery:

- If you want to minimize the cybersickness you will feel while exploring a virtual environment, keep your exposure duration short until your senses are accustomed to the virtual environment. If you must endure a long exposure of over 20 minutes, expect to experience intensified sickness during early exposure and intensified aftereffects. With those heightened aftereffects, remember: it will take longer for your senses to recalibrate once you return to the real world.

- Refrain from jerky or quick movements when first immersed in a virtual world. Slow, smooth, deliberate movements will induce fewer and less severe cybersickness effects while your body adjusts to virtual world sensory feedback.

- If you're concerned about the length of time you may have to spend in post-exposure readaptation, limit the time you spend in VR to short exposures. Importantly, allow sufficient time before you engage in post-VR actions that could put you in danger. A tentative rule of thumb is to allow two to three times as much time recovering as you spent VR "tripping" before you engage in anything risky.

- When you re-emerge from a virtual environment, walk about safely. Don't just sit down. Active, not passive, interaction with the new environment hastens the sensory readaptation process.

commissioner for training, Scott was one of the department's highest ranking females. As such, she was responsible for coordinating training for 31,000 uniformed officers and 9,000 civilians. She provided training that improved NYPD officers' relationship with the community, especially African-Americans.

"Making changes in the police department was something I took to heart because when I was growing up during the Civil Rights era, there were a lot of injustices against blacks that police ignored," Scott said, adding that one of those injustices was perpetuated against her family.

"There was a murder attempt on my family members and the prime suspect was a police officer, but nothing was done about it," Scott said. "They were returning home from church when a car drove up beside our family car and filled it with buck shots," said Scott who was home at the time waiting for her family to return. "They were near the house when I heard the shot, but I thought it was a blow out." No one was killed. However, her father, Rev. John Henry Scott, a Civil Rights leader, was shot in the arm.

Though her family members were frequently treated as criminals, Scott said that their "only crime" was to stand up for their right to live as equal human beings during a time when such an act was openly considered a threat to white society. The family knew that it could expect little protection from the law. As the deputy police commissioner for training, Scott worked to make changes in the department that would help eliminate prejudicial treatment by police.

Scott dealt with racism that existed among officers in the NYPD by implementing training and a community policing project that would enlighten officers about the cultures of those they serve. In addition, she also supported training that would lessen discriminatory practices internally. Scott became an ardent supporter of getting the department to fully integrate women in its operation. She developed a women's action plan and got the department to, among other things, formulate a pregnancy policy and provide increasing advancement opportunities for women. In addition, she designed training to help those in authority better communicate and work with their staff, especially those with different ethnic backgrounds.

But there was a lighter side to her position. The perks that came with being the highest ranking female often placed her in the company of some very prominent people, such as First Lady Hillary Clinton, actress Kathleen Turner and U.S. Rep. Kweisi Mfume. Photographs of her with the celebrities are framed and scattered throughout her office.

But the place that Scott held in "high society" did not erase the torments she faced in earlier years. For Scott, her past is as close as her childhood memories.

"When my father was inducted into the Louisiana Black Hall of Fame, the organizers asked my sister to speak. During the delivery of her speech, she reflected on her childhood. She said that while other adults remember dolls and Disney as a part of their childhood, she remembered the hatred directed towards us. And I thought to myself, how true," Scott said, adding that memories of cross burnings, death threats from the Ku Klux Klan, unprovoked murder attempts, and being called "nigger" would remain with her a lifetime, not as a reason to hate, but to give her drive to hope and work for a better tomorrow.

But no matter how hard she strived toward making improvements within the NYPD, she met with opposition. Many officers were strongly opposed to an outsider who was also an African-American female holding one of the department's highest positions.

"As a deputy commissioner, I had the authority to supervise those of lesser rank, including deputy chiefs. Some people were uncomfortable with an African-American female having that authority, especially when I had never been a police officer," Scott said.

She was also criticized by many in the African-American community who wanted immediate changes within the department.

"I was in the department beating my head against the wall to make changes. Those inside were beating me up everyday, and the African-American community said that I wasn't doing enough. I began to wonder why I was trying so hard," Scott said.

After spending four years with NYPD, Scott decided to call it quits and return to her first love: teaching. She is a well-known criminal justice scholar who has taught at Rutgers, Howard and North Carolina Central universities.

In addition to teaching, Scott is completing a book that she is coauthoring titled "Law Enforcement and the Black Community." The book is being published by Michigan State Press. Part of the book will include interviews with five African-Americans who were police chiefs in major cities.

She is also the author of several articles, including those focusing on African-American males involved in the criminal justice system, community policing and politics among police.

Though she is no longer with the NYPD, Scott remains an advocate for change. She sits on a citizen's advisory panel for the U.S. Department of Justice Immigration and Naturalization Service and on an advisory panel for the National Center for Women and Policing. She is also a sought-after speaker.

Scott holds a doctorate in political science from Atlanta University, a master's degree in political science from the University of Iowa, Iowa City, and a bachelor's degree in political science from Southern University, Baton Rouge.

Nursing Students Fly With Air Care Team Of Orlando

The Air Care Team of Orlando Regional Medical Center landed at the Central Florida Research Park to demonstrate its services to UCF students enrolled in a critical care nursing elective course. The professor for the class, Mary Lou Noll, and three students also participated in an eight-hour observation experience, flying with the Air Care Team during its regular hours.

Former columnist speaks on war between the sexes

In recognition of Women's History Month (March), attorney Susan Estrich, a veteran of three presidential campaigns, a talk radio host at KABC in Los Angeles, a contributing editor of The Los Angeles Times and a weekly columnist for LISA Today, spoke at UCF last week. Her topic was "The War Between the Sexes: Let the Truce Begin."

Estrich is a professor of law and political science at the University of Southern California Law Center and is a member of the District of Columbia Bar, the California Bar and the United States Supreme Court Bar.

Estrich also sits on the Board of Directors for Planned Parenthood of Los Angeles and on the board for the California Abortion Rights Action League. She is a past member of the Democratic National Committee (1984-1988) and the Fairness Commission of the Democratic Party (1985-1986).

Past positions and offices held by Estrich include having been a professor of law at Harvard Law School (1981-1990), a senior counsel for the Commission to Write a Code of Ethics for the City of Los Angeles (1989), a general litigation attorney with Tuttle & Taylor of Los Angeles (1986-1987) and a national board member of the American Civil Liberties Union (1984-1986).

She was also the national campaign manager for the "Dukakis for President Campaign" (1987-1988). Estrich also served as the senior policy adviser during the "Mondale-Ferraro Campaign" of 1984 during which time she traveled with Mondale during the general election as adviser on domestic policy issues. During the same year, she was the executive director of the Democratic National Platform Committee in Washington, D.C. Three years prior while in Washington, D.C., she served as a special assistant to Sen. Edward Kennedy.

Estrich graduated magna cum laude in 1977 from Harvard Law School, where she was the first woman to serve as president of the Harvard Law Review.

The debt will be retired over the next 20 years from the Research Pavilion's rental proceeds.

Prior to the bond sale, the UCF Foundation financed the facility through a five-year loan, secured by a pledge against endowments. The loan was carrying a rate of 7.05 percent.

The Research Pavilion, now appraised at $11.5 million, was acquired for $7.1 million by the UCF Foundation in November 1994, from the Resolution Trust Corp. The building, which adjoins the CFRP, was purchased as an investment and to free up classroom, faculty office and research space on campus.

Currently, 64 percent of the 129,088 square feet of rentable space is filled by UCF operations. The UCF Foundation occupies an additional 5 percent of the space. Government and private sector tenants account for 2 percent and 28 percent of the square footage respectively. All tenants who held lease agreements other than month-to-month ones and requested renewal have been extended.

UCF Youth Sports Festival

Saturday, March 30, 9 a.m. registration at the Wayne Densch Sports Complex

The UCF Alumni Association's K-Club is holding a sports clinic for boys and girls grades K-8. Participants can choose to attend a baseball, basketball, cheerleading, football, soccer, tennis or volleyball clinic taught by UCF star athletes and coaches. The cost is $1, which includes a lunch. Researchers Meet With Reporters

The Office of Public Affairs is sponsoring a series of "UCF Professors and Orlando Sentinel Reporters Network" luncheons that link UCF researchers with reporters who are interested in their field of research. The first luncheon, which was held in February, allowed professors who are doing health-related research to explain their work to Delthia Rick (left) and Mike Oliver (right). The next luncheon will be for research related to tourism. Further information will be mailed to all faculty later this month.

UCF student finalist for 'Student of the Year Award'

UCF student Nicole Penne was named one of seven finalists for the Florida College Student of the Year Award. The award is presented annually by Florida Leader magazine, which recognizes students who support themselves through college, excel academically and are involved in community service and political activism on and off campus. Students from universities, private colleges, community colleges and other schools throughout Florida compete in the scholarship contest. The winner will be announced on April 12 at a press conference in Tallahassee. The other finalists are from the University of Florida, Florida A&M University, Florida State University, Barry University, Jacksonville University and the University of Florida.

UCF students Ariadne Ferro and David Hiatt were honorable mentions.

The winners will share nearly $30,000 in scholarships and prizes provided by the First Union National Bank of Florida, Winn-Dixie, The Anthony Grandio Com., Eastpak and other sponsors, and will be featured in the special "Student of the Year" issue of the Florida Leader magazine, which will be published in April.

Judges included Charles Reed, chancellor of the State University System, Clark Maxwell Jr., executive director for the Board of Community Colleges, David Lawrence, publisher of the Miami Herald, Terrence Bell, former U.S. Secretary of Education, and educators, business leaders and journalists from across the nation.

Penne was selected based on her academic performance (GPA 3.8), her work experience and her many activities on campus. She currently works as a legislative assistant for the university lobbyist as a political science intern and previously was the director of speakers for CAB. She is the debate team president and was a first place winner of the Lincoln-Douglas Debate Competition. She is also the chair for the President's Leadership Council and president of Omicron Delta Kappa National Honors Society. She was a senator (two years) and the attorney general for Student Government. She is also the recipient of the Florida Undergraduate Academic Scholarship and the Golden Key Peat Marwick Scholarship winner. She was voted "Most Promising New Senator" in 1994 and was a delegate for Women as Leaders Academic Seminar, which was sponsored by the Washington Center.

She intends to enter graduate school upon graduating this year with a major in political science and a minor in philosophy. She plans to study political theory and women's studies and eventually teach political science on the college level.
