BSU asking for half of Senate's money

by Samantha J. Griffin
CENTRAL FLORIDA FUTURE

UCF's Black Student Union is asking for over half of the total Senate Working Fund to cover expenses, officer's wages, and programs.

Senate Bill 19-62 requests $16,110 in funding for the BSU, whose active membership is about 20 people. The Senate Working Fund totals $30,000.

The Organizations, Appropriations and Finance Committee is studying the bill to check the details of the BSU's request.

Senate secretary Bryan McCullar said there are categories in the request that need to be specified. He noted a request for $2,500 in travel expenses.

"We need to know where they're going," he said. "Are they going on a vacation or taking a legitimate trip?"

He added, "I don't see any way they will get all $16,110."

McCullar said there are other problems with the BSU's request. Namely, the group's request for money to pay some of its officers.

"No other student organizations have salaries for their officers," McCullar said. The BSU is asking for $9,000 in payroll for the positions of director of administration, assistant director of administration, and pro tempore.

Rossette Smith and Robert Donald occupy the three positions.

Donald said, "Currently the situation is that Rossette was pro tem and still is pro tem." He said Smith is also director of BSU.

Donald said he holds the position of assistant director.

Director of Minority Student Services Robert L. Belle, an advisor for the BSU, said he is hopeful the budget will be approved.

"When I talked with Rossette [Smith], she indicated that she and Bob [Robert Donald] were going to be working so that the budget could be approved," he said.

Donald said he does not know when the budget might be ready for approval.

He said, "I'd like to have it approved and finalized sometime in the next two weeks."

UPROOTED

This tree at UCF could not withstand the afternoon showers that occurred during the holiday weekend. It was uprooted by gushing winds, and it subsequently blocked a path to the Education building. The showers dampened many Fourth of July activities, including picnics and fireworks displays.

NEW ROADS

Two members of a road crew raise a manhole cover in order for the road to be resurfaced. The work is being done outside of the Administration building and extends to the dirt parking lot of the Wayne Densch Sports Center.

Do you take this punk?...

by Richard Thibault
SPECIAL TO THE FUTURE

The young woman walked down the street, dressed in a black leather mini-skirt and black nylons. Her belt was made of handcuffs. Long orange hair hung down over her dark sunglasses.

This punk rocker approached 50 men and 50 women on a busy street and asked for directions to, of all things, a bridal shop.

It was an experiment for a journalism class. Two UCF students who conducted the experiment found that people have become more receptive to strange styles of dress.

All 100 people either gave directions or said they did not know the shop's location. However, 12 men and four women refused to be interviewed afterward. Of those interviewed, 20 men liked her outfit, compared to ten women.

"I like it," a grinning middle-aged man said. "I make lace for a living."

"I thought she looked adorable," an elderly woman said.

A 10-year-old California boy really liked her style: "Okay!" he said, grinning from ear to ear.

Four men and 12 women said they did not like the outfit.

A 50-year-old woman said she was cautious when talking to the punker. "She scared me to death, especially the belt," she said. "I know it's just a trend though."

"She didn't look like she was looking for a bridal shop," a 30-year-old Winter Park woman said. "She looked horrible."

A seven-year-old Orlando boy had only one word for her appearance: "Ugly!"

Fourteen men and 24 women said the woman's punk rocker appearance was irrelevant to them.

"I've looked much worse," a 26-year-old Orlando man said.

A 24-year-old Winter Park woman said, "She was just expressing her individuality."

When the woman asked a 26-year-old New York man for directions, he said: "I don't know. I don't usually buy my dresses around here." Then he laughed and said: "You're getting married, huh? I guess I won't ask you out, then."

"Are you getting married?" asked a 44-year-old woman. "Well bless your little heart." When interviewed, the woman said, "It's not a look I like, but I'm immune to it."

A 42-year-old California man said, "She looked like she was walking the street, if you know what I mean." He didn't know where the bridal shop was, but pointed out a nearby lingerie shop.

One young man was less than helpful in giving her directions. "I don't know where it is, and I never will," he said. "I'm not getting married."

Alumni not paying for garden; but it's still a seedy idea

Correction: Last week's editorial stated that the flower garden to be built on the reflecting pond green was to be funded through alumni contributions. This is incorrect.

The truth is that alumni who donate $1,000 to the university will get a brick with their name on it. The bricks will be used as a border for the garden.

The actual funding for the garden will come from the university's landscaping budget. The Central Florida Future regrets this error.

Our stand: With that in mind, a flower garden in the shape of the school's logo might not be such a bad idea. Admittedly, such a garden would be attractive and a pleasant addition to the university.

At this point the only problem is the location. There are plenty of places on campus that could house the garden without taking away a student gathering area.

Why not dig up those ugly bushes and trees on each side of the back entrance to the administration building and put pretty mirror gardens of the emblem there.

Or better yet, there is all kinds of room in front of the administration building. Students are never to be found tanning and studying in that grass and just about any casual visitor to the campus would be guaranteed to see a garden located in such a high profile area.

Give us a break, traditions are few and far between at UCF. Don't destroy one of the few we have.

One for SG: To be more precise, this is for the benefit of the student senate.

The above writing is called "editorial comment." If you have a problem with anything we say on this page, the correct course of action is to write a letter to the editor.

Much like the writing in this section are the cartoons. They also qualify as "editorial comment." Once again, if you have a problem with the cartoons, use the above course of action.

An example of an incorrect course of action would be to, say, call us and ask for the last name of our cartoonist because you disagree with what he says. Ever heard of freedom of speech, gang? That means that we don't have to share your view on a situation and are darn well allowed to express our view.

What did you plan to do if we had given you his name, anyway? Look up his address and firebomb his house? That must be why you are the student senate. The only question is, will you ever learn?

UCF in 1997: the way it might be

The young girl was just starting college, the first woman in her family to attempt higher education. No, she wasn't attending Harvard or anything like that. But she was in college.

In high school she was athletic. She ran track and cross country. She wasn't a star, but she was always in shape.

She didn't feel motivated to try out for any running sports when she got to college, though. And with the hurry and confusion of the first week of classes, she never had the opportunity to go out for a good morning jaunt.

In her second week of college, she screamed for a break. College was exhausting, yet she felt a primal compulsion to let off some steam. She had no more energy to study, but she felt plenty strong for a 3-mile run.

So she changed into some running shorts and a T-shirt and left her books behind for a little while. She began to feel rejuvenated as she came shooting out of the entrance of the apartment complex where she lived and onto the sidewalk. During the day she wouldn't dare run near this road. She heard plenty of horror stories at her orientation about it. Alafaya Trail. Cars strayed off this crowded road, like during rush hour. And trucks, too. But the girl felt safe, and relaxed, running along the road at night. She wondered if maybe it was a bit dark to be running alone, but she needed the break.

Two days later her parents picked her up. She was leaving college. Maybe for good. In her second week of school, while taking a jog to forget about studying for a little while, she was raped. Brutally and repeatedly. The man was never caught, but the deputy the girl's father talked to said such was usually the case. Young girls get raped on that road all the time, he said. The rapist is rarely caught...

TIM BALL
The other side of nowhere

What you've just read is a bit of future-drama. Rape is something that does happen on Alafaya Trail. And the number of reported cases is increasing. What can be done about it?

Lights. Did you hear that Florida DOT? I said lights!

Did you hear that UCF? Lights! LIGHTS!! Until those two powers that be get some lighting on Alafaya Trail, the rape rate will continue to rise. Convincing people to stop using the sidewalk won't work. That would be like tearing up I-4 and telling tourists to find the back roads to Disney. People need to use Alafaya Trail to get to campus. There is no alternative available. There are no "back roads." So far, people with the power to do something about the problem have failed to do what's necessary to make Alafaya Trail safe.

I hope they don't have any daughters coming to UCF.

Letters

■ GARDEN OK, BUT NOT AT POND

Editor:

Although this letter is addressed to the editors and the student body at large, its content is addressed to those senators who support the idea of a flower garden in front of the library.

Hey guys, what's with the flower garden? Is it something we need? Is the library green the right place to put it? Is it something we can afford?

For a number of reasons—including dread of melanoma and time and studying demands—I'm not a sun worshiper. So I don't hang out in the "prime tanning zone" very often. But I am an ardent girl watcher and know some students who like to catch some rays and some Z's during breaks from classes. Loss of the PTZ during the remodeling of the library two years ago was a heartbreak to me and to them. Putting in the flower garden would make this a permanent loss of the PTZ.

Do we really need the flower garden? Some argue that we need to beautify our school. I agree that UCF could use some relief from the squatting brick monoliths that dominate the campus. I can also see that a garden with our logo in flowers would be a "big school" touch for UCF. But that brings me to my second question.

Is the library green the right place to put it? The area around the reflecting pond is already an attractive sight—we've even got pictures of it on a post card in the bookstore. I say, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." Why not put it at the main entrance to the university? That way, anyone who might not see the reflecting pond or anyone who just drives by can see how beautiful our campus is. It can serve as a bright face for UCF and it can be where a face belongs—on the front.

Now we come the most difficult question: Can we afford it? As last week's editorial mentioned, availability of funds is a major problem for UCF (as for all universities). And with our limited funds, might they not be put to better use by applying them to research or teacher incentives? Or, if the money is for the students, why not use it to extend the library hours or make computer access easier for those who aren't in a computer class and just need a word or data processor?

I think if you could (or would) ask the "student-on-the-street" about the flower garden, the response would be a resounding "NO." So, think it over and see if we can't put the garden or the money somewhere else.

said. "The lows are in the 70s in Florida and the high at the New England mini-camp was 56."

"I think it will do me some good to practice in this weather [in Florida] and then go up North. Staying in shape is the main thing."

Davis has been working out at a Jacksonville YMCA. He said he has been swimming, lifting weights, running track and catching footballs.

"The key will be trying to go a whole practice without injury," Davis said. "You lift weights to sustain different hits, but it's not just physical, it's also mental."

Davis has also been working out with other pro football prospects. Another Patriot, Earnest Gibson, who is from Jacksonville, has been working out with the former Knight. Also, two former Ribault High School teammates of Davis', Don Fan and Keven Martin, are trying out for the Dallas Cowboys. Fan played for UCF rival Bethune-Cookman, and Martin played for Boston College.

"We're trying to help each other," Davis said.

Davis will be facing his other teammate, Wilson, on August 1, at New England. "We talked about it," Davis, who has kept contact with Wilson, said.

Davis showing promise with N.E. Patriots

Editor's note: This is the second story in a three-part series dealing with former Knights and their chances of making it in the professional football ranks.

by Scott Broden
CENTRAL FLORIDA FUTURE

UCF may have its first NFL player in Elgin Davis, the Knights' all-time leading rusher with 2,221 yards.

Davis is trying out for the New England Patriots, who drafted him in the 12th round. Teammate Ted Wilson is also trying out for the Washington Redskins, who drafted him in the 10th round.

In the meantime, Aaron Sam represents UCF's first long-term, guaranteed contract player. He signed with the Cleveland Browns as a free agent, but he won't be able to play with them for another year because he suffered a knee injury the first practice of mini-camp in May.

Davis also has a knee injury that sidelined him in the 1985 season for the Knights. However, he remains upbeat.

"I've been concentrating on things I've learned in the mini-camp," Davis said. "I had a chance to learn the plays. They also had me returning punts and kickoffs."

Davis said coming from a Division II program makes it harder to get noticed.

"Coming from a smaller school, a lot of guys are not known through their abilities," Davis said. "I feel I have done a good job. A lot of guys from small schools are sleepers."

"They just have to get everyone to say, 'Wow! Where did this guy come from? It's definitely a winning program."

Davis said the Patriots paid him $450 a week for the mini-camp. He added that his agent, Nick Kish, who is representing Sam and Wilson as well, is negotiating a contract with the Patriots for $75,000 to $80,000. Davis said the contract is secondary for him.

"Most of all, you're fulfilling a dream," he said.

Davis also said that the competition is a lot stronger at the pro level.

"In college, you have just three or four guys who are exceptional," Davis said. "In the pros, everybody is exceptional. Along with that, you must have great discipline because you know if you don't work hard, there's someone to take your place."

"Everything is raised at another level. Everyone is hustling."

Despite the competition level, Davis said the pros are still athletes just like himself.

"When you get up and practice with them," he said, "you realize they're ordinary guys like yourself who play football."

"When you first see them, these are guys you're all excited about. But when the smoke clears, you find they're people similar to yourself. They talk to you and try to help you out."

Davis had a locker next to Andre Tippett, the Patriots' all-pro linebacker. Davis said Tippett and some of the other veterans verbally intimidated him and the other rookies.

"They did that for fun," Davis explained, "but deep down inside, they're friendly guys. It's the same thing relived when you're just a freshman at college with the older guys teasing you except it's at a different level. After a week of it, they don't do it anymore."

Davis said he stacks up well against the other New England running backs, including third-round selection Bob Perryman, a 200-pound fullback from Michigan who was the Patriot's second pick overall.

"I feel New England is lacking a breakaway back who can catch out of the backfield," Davis said. "All of the other backs are third-and-one guys with the exception of myself and Reggie Duper, whom they drafted first last year."

The Patriots' top running back, Tony Collins, has been in a rehabilitation program. "I guess that will probably work in my favor," Davis commented.

Davis said the key for him to make the Patriots will be his being in top shape. He has been working out on a daily basis in his hometown of Jacksonville.

"The weather up there [Massachusetts] is not as bad as Florida," Davis

NO PAIN, NO GAIN

Andy Granados, a freshman UCF football player, goes for broke while working out at the UCF dome. Granados will have to work hard to earn a starting position on the Knights football team, as the squad is expected to have one of its best seasons in the upcoming year.

Speculation during doldrums

Here it is the second week in July, and what good sports are there on the television today? Aside from bikini watching at the local beaches, there are only three major events worth talking about in the world of sports. They are baseball, Wimbledon and the new concept of Arena Football.

Baseball is the summer's major sport and the national pastime. On July 14, the National and American Leagues send their best players to participate in the yearly All-Star Game, which will be played at Oakland-Alameda Coliseum.

The starters, who are chosen by popular vote, are among the game's elite. What you probably want from me is a prediction on who will win the game so you can laugh at me when I am wrong.

Fine. I'll give you one.

But, first, you have to hear my reasons on why I am making my wrong prediction. This game will be a battle of speed versus power.

The American League relies on the round-tripper for run production, while the National Leaguers depend upon the stolen base, the hit and run and good defense to win games. Guys like Darryl Strawberry and Eric Davis are expected to reach the 30-homer, 30-stolen base plateau every year. In the American League, it is an amazing feat if any one person accomplishes it. The only person who has an outside chance at it is Yankee Rickey Henderson.

JOHN DEVINE

Rounding the bases

My prediction: Speed will triumph over power for the 20th time in the past 22 years. The score: N.L. 6 A.L. 3.

How about those tennis championships at Wimbledon last week? When the top news is dictated by a 34-year-old man and an 18-year-old girl, there has to be some excitement.

Jimmy Connors, playing in his 16th Wimbledon, sparkled until he ran into the eventual champion, Pat Cash. On Sunday, the 22-year-old Australian defeated Ivan Lendl (number one in the world) in straight sets to wrap up his first Grand Slam championship.

A special note goes to Lendl for being such a good loser (if there is such a thing). He realized that his career will not be complete until he wins the big one in England. Lendl commented, "If I could win Wimbledon and lose every other match, I would take it."

On the female side, history was going to be made in the finals that consisted of Martina Navratilova and Steffi Graf. If Martina won, she would place her name in history as the only player to win six consecutive Wimbledon.

If Graf won, she would become the only person besides Martina and Chris Evert to be ranked number one in the world in this decade. It was hard enough having to accept the fact that there was someone in women's tennis with legs larger than mine, but now there are two. I wonder what they eat.

Oh, by the way, Martina won her eighth Wimbledon plate, as she defeated the young West German in straight sets.

For those of you who have ESPN, let me know how you feel about Arena Football. It combines the facets of the MISL (Major Indoor Soccer League) and the NFL. Write to me here at the Central Florida Future so I can relay your comments to the rest of the UCF public.
