

Critical Tourism Studies Proceedings

Volume 2019

Article 80

2019

Queer Desires, the Beach and Catalan Cinema

Toni Maestre Brotons
Universitat d'Alacant, Spain

Pau Obrador Pons
Northumbria University, UK

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.library.tru.ca/cts-proceedings>

 Part of the Tourism and Travel Commons

Recommended Citation

Maestre Brotons, Toni and Obrador Pons, Pau (2019) "Queer Desires, the Beach and Catalan Cinema," Critical Tourism Studies Proceedings: Vol. 2019 , Article 80.

Available at: <https://digitalcommons.library.tru.ca/cts-proceedings/vol2019/iss1/80>

This Abstract is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ TRU Library. It has been accepted for inclusion in Critical Tourism Studies Proceedings by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ TRU Library. For more information, please contact apaterson@tru.ca.

CTS 2019

Title: Queer Desires, the Beach and Catalan Cinema

Authors:

Toni Maestre Brotons
Universitat d'Alacant, Spain

Pau Obrador Pons
Northumbria University, UK

Abstract:

The beach is at the heart of Mediterranean mass tourism. However, it remains invisible to cultural studies of tourism, which are more interested in urban and rural geographies. The invisibility of the beach is not just the result of lack of empirical research but of our theoretical inability to make sense of a liminal and fluid space. In response to these shortcomings, this paper analyses the place of the beach in Catalan cinema. In so doing, we want to examine further the influence of cinema in shaping the contemporary experience of the beach (Carter, 2007; Handyside, 2009; Cirer, 2016). The paper looks at two films: Kràmpack (Cesc Gay, 1999) and Nívols d'estiu (Felipe Vega, 2008). The main focus of the paper is the relation between space, sexuality and the beach. The beach appears in these films as a liminal space in opposition to both, the centrality of the city in contemporary societies and the hegemony of heterosexuality, family and marriage. Such liminality is reinforced by the ephemerality of the beach, which is not a place of permanence or residence but just a mere parenthesis in everyday life (Urbain, 2003). We want to show the extent that the cultural and geographical characteristics of the beach affords relations that depart from the established norm, including infidelity and homosexuality. We are also interested in the ludic, material and sensual character of the beach, which defies the visual and detached logic of the tourist gaze (Obrador, 2012). The sensual and ludic character of the beach is especially visible in Kràmpack, which examines the game of seduction between two teenagers.

Carter S (2007) Rise and Shine: Sunlight, Technology and Health. Oxford: Berg Publishers.

Cirer-Costa JC (2016) Cinema and the automobile: Driving factors of new tourism models in the early years of the Golden Age. Tourism Management Perspectives 19: 24–31.

Gay, Cesc (2000). Kràmpack. Messidor Films.

Handyside, Fiona (2009). "Rohmer à la plage: The role of the beach in three films by Eric Rohmer". Studies in French Cinema, 9:2, 147-160.

Obrador, P. (2012) 'Touching the Beach', in Paterson, M. and Dodge, M. (eds) Touching Space, Placing Touch. New York: Routledge, pp. 47–70.

Urbain, J. D. (2003). At the Beach. Minneapolis, MN: University of Minnesota Press.

Vega, Felipe (2001). Nívols d'estiu. Messidor Films & Tornasol Films.
