This is how we learn:
In enclosed spaces,
busy as buzzing bees bustle, smell of cocoa beans collide with smooth jazz, earbuds jammed in.
Sitting in too-small desks, shoved into too-small, musky rooms watching yet another video as your teacher nurses another hangover.
Through brilliant colors, radiating from every corner, watching the dancing music float through your mind, forever beating to your internal clock others put you into a check box labeled: disabled Leaning against a wall waiting for your turn to tussle already categorized Through deafening quiet, true quiet only pierced by the occasional flip of a page of a book too big too hard too much
In an open back gown of white, speckled with blue dots chemicals race in your veins pumped through pill, IV subduing you
This is how we educate.
