Schwinden wants academic priorities adjusted

By STEPHANIE HANSON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The governor's office must work more closely with the Board of Regents and the Legislature to readjust funding priorities for the Montana University System, Ted Schwinden said last night at the University of Montana.

Schwinden, Democratic candidate for governor, said that the university system cannot be funded solely by cutting waste from government operations — a position his Republican rival, Jack Ramirez, has taken.

Schwinden spoke to about 90 people at the Women's Center. His speech was sponsored by ASUM Programming.

An alternative for possible university funding is changing the amount of personal and property taxes taken for higher education funding, he said. Schwinden said he supports seeing the university system funded at a more satisfactory operating level.

Schwinden has served as lieutenant governor under Gov. Thomas Judge since 1976. His running mate is George Turman.

People involved in higher education, including students, have been "frustrated" by the current 19:1 student-faculty ratio used for funding, Schwinden said.

That formula bases the funding level for a university on the number of full-time students; for every 19 full-time students, the salary for one faculty position can be funded.

In the past year and a half, the legislative Interim Finance Committee has been working to devise a more flexible funding formula, based on the types of programs at each school and the spending levels at similar-sized schools in the West.

However Schwinden said, his political experience has seen reluctance to accept out-of-state solutions to Montana problems.

Several sharp exchanges were made between Schwinden and members of the audience who opposed his position on Initiative 84.

Initiative 84 would forbid the disposal of radioactive waste in Montana.

Schwinden said he opposes the initiative because it would make economic survival for uranium mining companies "virtually impossible."

But a woman in the audience said uranium mining would allow some toxic radioactive material to contaminate the ground and water supplies. She suggested that uranium mining be banned until some way to guarantee the disposal of radioactive wastes safely be devised.

Schwinden said he agreed that the disposal of radioactive waste is one of the most serious environmental problems in the country now, but not all the risks in uranium mining can be eliminated, he said.

The solution, he suggested, is in finding "levels of acceptable risks."

The primary responsibility that the state has in regard to the Anaconda Co.'s smelter closure is to see that federal agencies "do not sit" on short-term solutions such as unemployment insurance and low-interest loans for unemployed workers.

Schwinden outlined these political positions in response to other questions:

- He favors passage of Initiative 85. That initiative would require all lobbyists to disclose their financial backing.

- He is undecided on Initiative 87, which would require a refundable deposit on unrecycled bottles and cans if a voluntary recycling program developed by the beverage and recycling industries does not recycle 60 percent of all containers by 1982.

- He favors investigation into alternative energy sources available in the state to lessen dependence on foreign energy sources. Schwinden said that the development of one or two synthetic fuels plants in the state may make it easier for the state to survive in the future.

- The establishment of a state Department of Energy may have some merit. While he neither advocates nor rejects that suggestion, he said, it may be a way to handle the difficult energy issues facing the state now and in the future.

CB approves pay hikes for lobbyists, reporters

By GREG GADBERRY
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Central Board voted last night to dip into the ASUM till to finance pay raises for legislative lobbyists and reporters.

The ASUM Legislative Committee received $2,200 to up the salaries of its two legislative lobbyists, and the Montana Kaimin received $1,200 to increase the wages of its two legislative reporters.

Under the committee's plan, lobbyists Steve Carey and Mike Dahlem would both receive $500 pay increases, which would increase their salaries to $2,500 for the 1981 state legislative session.

Also, the plan allows each lobbyist a $500 expense account.

The remaining $200 goes to fund a work-study legislative intern to work two quarters for the Women's Resource Center. The money was given to the Legislative Committee rather than the WRC because the intern will be working closely with the committee in order to coordinate lobbying efforts.

According to ASUM Business Manager Steve Spaulding, who explained the plan to CB, half the money will be taken from ASUM's special allocations fund this quarter, and the other half from Winter Quarter's special allocations fund.

Former ASUM Lobbyist Bill Bronson, who spoke in favor of the pay raise, said that student lobbyists deserved the money in consideration of their long hours on the job.

CB agreed and voted to accept the plan.

Sue O'Connell, editor of the Kaimin, told CB that the two reporters who will work in Helena during the 1981 legislative session also deserve to get higher salaries.

Currently, she said, the reporters receive $230 for each of the four months of the session.

O'Connell said her new plan would have reporters receiving $400 per month, with the Kaimin kicking in $250 per month, and CB paying $150 per month.

Student garden still a possibility

By NANCI OLSON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

The Campus Development Committee decided in a meeting yesterday that students should be allowed to pursue the idea of vegetable garden plots on the university, but not in the area originally planned for.

The garden plots were planned for an area near Married Student Housing last spring by David Curtis, ASUM president, but they have several problems, said Ted Parker, ex-officio member and director of the Physical Plant.

The people in Married Student Housing have complained that the plots may bring in additional traffic and vandalism, he said.

Parker also said the garden plots may endanger the experimental plot of the botany students.

Other areas which could be considered for garden plots include the area east of Dornblaser Stadium, and at Fort Missoula, where the university owns land.

Tom Hayes, Director of Housing, said he would like to see garden plots available to students, but that the project would be hard to administer unless it was exclusively for married students.

The garden plot plan includes 171 plots, which would be 12 feet by 12 feet and available to all students.

There would be a $7 rental fee and a $5 damage fee for the plots. But Hayes said the project would cost $10 a plot to administer.

Hayes said that Montana State University has garden plots, and that they are successful. MSU charges a straight fee of $15 to students and the university does nothing but plow and disc the lands, he said.

And students at MSU are required to settle disputes over the plots in city courts, he said.

"Administratively, this makes sense," Hayes said.

The Campus Development Committee discussed whether students would need to pay for the necessary top soil and plowing.

In other business, the Campus Development Committee discussed but took no action on the installation of windows in the Social Sciences Building.

Committee members agreed that the window project, which was top priority by the sociology department last year, should be reconsidered because of campus sensitivity toward the window remodeling plan in the Liberal Arts building.

The people who have offices in the Liberal Arts building will wonder why the sociology department receives windows, while their window size is reduced, one committee member said.

CAN YOU IMAGINE a life and death struggle for this valuable, essential, dynamic piece of real estate? Well, it may very well happen—this, the just-vacated offices of the University of Montana Foundation in Main Hall, has now been deposited in the "space bank" for the UM campus. Cramped university groups on the lookout for expansion possibilities must now vie for this exciting office. The UM Foundation moved early this week to a campus-owned house at 600 University Ave. (Staff photo by Debby Larson.)

Freedom of expression a right for everyone

Along with their smiles and miniature, green New Testaments, 28 Gideon men brought to the University of Montana campus this week a debate over First Amendment rights.

The Bill of Rights states in no uncertain terms that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Free expression, then — be it simply passing out a text of one's religious beliefs or assembling to protest a specific action — is constitutionally guaranteed.

Few people would argue against the right of free expression — until, that is, it comes to the point where another's free expression threatens some personal belief. Some people fear or hate those who express ideas they don't agree with.

And so uproars like the one that happened when a small number of people decided they didn't want to be bothered by men handing out Bibles come about. The question raised by Melinda Sinistro and the 55 others who signed a petition against the Gideons is whether a university should ignore

First Amendment rights and favor one minority's right to expression over another's.

The answer is a definite "no." But it's a question that will continue to be asked because the rights the First Amendment protects are rights associated with controversial issues — issues like religion, pornography, censorship that people feel most strongly and often, most emotionally about.

At the University of Montana, too, one man's pornography is another's art — one person's religious harassment another's exercise of free speech.

- Spring Quarter, University Center Director Ray Chapman shut down an erotic art exhibit because some considered it distasteful.

- A high-gear advertisement campaign for religious speaker Josh McDowell met some opposition from students who tore down posters as their expression of protest to his appearance.

- An advertisement in Spring's Kaimin printed the slogan: "Join the Army; travel to exotic, distant lands; meet exciting, unusual people and kill them." Many people were appalled that the controversial advertisement was printed.

For Melinda Sinistro and the others who signed the petition against the Gideons, and for the hundreds who signed a pro-Gideon petition and wrote letters to the editor to defend the Gideons, the issue was free speech.

It's uncomfortable to be confronted by unknown people pushing information ("What do these people want from me?" is the immediate concern.) But were they forced to make a choice between being assailed by "little men with little smiles" and Bibles and being denied information, few would choose the latter.

The free flow of information; the freedom to push no matter what cause, is what makes a university a university. It's what makes living under the Bill of Rights — with all its imperfections — worthwhile.

The right to criticize the principle and worth of free expression is itself, of course, a rough measure of society's freedom. The controversy with the Gideons proves — if nothing else — the importance and the existence of that freedom.

Help for veterans

Editor: I've just opened up shop on campus as a veteran's counselor, operating on a sort of combination internship, work-study, and volunteer basis, with a lot of co-operation and support from the Psychology Department and the department of guidance and counseling. I do informational counseling concerning agent orange and delayed stress, and I am coordinating two veterans' workshops, and one veterans' wives workshop.

I'm a Vietnam veteran myself, and am intensely interested in discussing the personal reality of, and the personal after-effects of, the military experience with anyone interested, whether they be veterans, veterans' wives, or someone contemplating the possibility of military service, or anyone else who is seriously interested.

A good group

Editor: Re: Melinda Sinistro and the Gideons.

I'm sorry to see that Miss Sinistro's reaction to the Gideons was one of feeling "harassed". To my knowledge and encounter with these gentlemen — which is precisely what they are — they were a group passing out New Testaments. That's it! There were no sales pitches and if you didn't want a book, "No" was a sufficient answer — they didn't push it!

I will agree that being approached more than a couple of times can be bothersome. However, when in many local businesses there may be two, three, or even four sales clerks that ask if you need assistance. These people even have the gall to "harass" customers with a sales pitch. I hope Melinda never goes shopping or a store may be slapped with a harassment suit!

There is also a question in my mind as to her questionnaire and some responses, such as "innumerable" times being approached. Innumerable for some is two or three and a slight overuse of the word.

If must be pointed out these people got permission from campus fiscal affairs. There are groups on campus that fail to get permission to speak or rally. Also, 3,900 Bibles were distributed and if my weak math background serves me right, that means 3,900 people received them. Out of 3,900 people, Melinda was able to get 55 to sign a petition banning these people from campus. Seems like a rather small percentage to me. There may be more disgruntled students but I think not enough to warrant banishment.

The Gideons are professional business people, not some crazy, raving Jesus freak off the street. They are polite, cordial, and yes, terrible as it seems, they even smile! If smiling is obnoxious, I feel very sorry for you. Perhaps what we need are a few more "obnoxious" people to make school a little brighter.

"If these guys were Hare Krishnas the administration would have a cow." Great use of an old cliché. You've done well as a journalism major, Melinda. The Gideons and Hare Krishnas are two very different groups and as stated the Gideons did not force anything on anyone or solicit donations, etc.

This is a public institution so is open to all groups. I feel the Gideons is one of the better groups to have been on this campus. To ban them would not only be illegal but also deny students on this campus access to more diverse groups with some very good ideas.

The GRE died today. I killed it with two smooth number two pencils. Assisted by Apollo, racing time in the gray arena I stood in sterile sweat among clammy kin from the doctoral kingdom 'mid masters of the brain cult, hushed through the lengthy operation, rushed to let the gray matter. A season of unreason, of demeaning keening, squirms, sighs, and cries from the Sage, "Don't open the book," "Lead the rounds." "Look at me."

Sympathy

Editor: I have to sympathize with Melinda Sinistro—those Bible-pushers can really Gideon your nerves. And seeing smiles everywhere is more than I am able to face. At least, though, the Brothers Grin were not just mouthing off; they were giving away books that you could really sink your teeth into. (Someone told me they were handing out new, tasty mints, but I think that was tongue-in-cheek.)

All right, I admit it; I've grown accustomed to their faith. But at least they weren't Moon-ies. (There's something fishy about the Unification Church, but I won't CARP on it now.)

Little minds

Editor: Yesterday I was approached by both the Gideons and Ms. Sinistro. The Gideons offered me a gift: Ms. Sinistro wanted something from me. I found it simple enough to tell the Gideons no. Apparently Ms. Sinistro has no concept of the word as personally applied. I knew what the Gideons purpose is: I have yet to discern Ms. Sinistro's.

Whatever led Ms. Sinistro to discern the difference between being offered a gift and asked to endorse a petition as the difference between "harassment" and public service is beyond me. I oppose active public solicitation by any organization for their funding. The Hare Krishnas do this. The Gideons do not, as they are self-funded. I was not asked to donate any money to the Gideons. I do not find it objectionable nor a form of harassment to either accept or decline a gift.

I was sitting next to a table in the Copper Commons where Ms. Sinistro probably received 5% of her signatures. One fellow happily signed, saying something like "Damn right I'll sign it, f—king Christians bug the hell out of me and I'm a g—damn atheist anyway." College has really expanded this guy's horizons! Also, concerning the questionnaire, I don't think that I could remember being approached by anyone an exact number of 14 times in one day, and just exactly how many is "innumerable" anyway?

I object to your inept comparison of the Gideons with the Hare Krishnas, Ms. Sinistro. I think you and your renegade band of 55 are the only ones "having cows." And lastly, although you probably did not exceed the tolerance of these "little men with little smiles," you have certainly exceeded mine! You and your friends with "little" minds.

Editor: In regard to the Tuesday Kaimin story by Steve Stuebner, reporting that some students were upset with Gideons on campus. It should be pointed out that many students welcome the Gideons on this campus. In response to Miss Sinistro's petition with 55 signatures to stop the spreading of religious literature on campus, I drafted a petition "Welcome the Gideons on campus" and collected over 100 signatures. The words "little men with little smiles" used by Melinda Sinistro to describe these Christian men who gave freely 3,900 New Testaments were very unkind words to describe these kindly gentlemen. Proverbs 10:18.

Religious freedom

Editor: To Melinda Sinistro: I don't know who pulled your chain, but I just can't resist the comeback. Concerning the article (sounded like an editorial) which appeared on page one of Tuesday's Kaimin, I have a few things to say.

These "little men with their little smiles" who are so obnoxious to you are successful men who could just as well stay at home and say the hell with you and the rest of the world. But because of their personal religious beliefs, they are giving of their free time and money to come here and elsewhere to give their message to others. Ever read the Bible, Melinda? Apparently not. But one of the basics of Christianity is to witness to others. That is what these men were doing. And in a way that would least bother those like you who do not care to listen.

I too was stopped "innumerable" times, but the only thing these gentlemen wanted of me was enough of my time to hand me a Bible and give me one of their "little" smiles. No more. I took a Bible, and for the rest of the day a simple "I have one, thank you" was sufficient. But I could not believe some of the remarks I overheard directed towards these men and their cause by many of my fellow "educated" students. Sorta made me wonder who raised 'em. Tell me, Miss Cynical, what did you do Monday to make the world a better place to live in, besides bitch and moan, and gather signatures for your petition. (55 out of 8,000-plus: Melinda I'm not impressed.)

And concerning your bit about Hare Krishna. That was a poor comparison of "harassment". Not one of these men I encountered stuffed a flower in my pocket.

Not one smothered me with incense and literature. Not one got in my face so close I could tell what he had for breakfast, or grab my arm to make me listen to their message. And NOT ONE begged me for money.

Melinda, I don't know you, and I don't really care if you're a Christian or not, or whether you're an atheist or not. But you scare me, Melinda. Because it's people like yourself that erode and tear at the fabric of our society, MY society.

Religious freedom is a basic right in this land, and that includes this campus. And as long as they don't force themselves on anyone, the Gideons have a constitutional right, and are duty bound by their beliefs, to do what they do. It's the same type of right which enables you to stand around campus and bug me to sign your petition.

So go ahead and circulate your petition and lament to the administration about how these men took up your valuable free time and made your day uncomfortable for you. It was "little" people like these men who have gained for us and have held on to the rights and freedoms which you are now exercising.

sophomore, general studies

No thank you

Editor: (This is an open letter to sophomore Melinda Sinistro and friends who felt "harassed" by "these little men with little smiles" who were giving out "religious books" on Monday.)

Ms. Sinistro, I am sorry that the passive offer of a "religious book" is seen by you as a forceful entry into your personal space and cause for an uproar. If you have found yourself in the deep end and "little men with little smiles" are indeed "all over the place"—perhaps you should consult with some of the many professional counselors supported by this institution. Ms. Sinistro, "the little men with little smiles" are not going to carry you away! If you don't get help soon, the big men in white coats might.

I am sure there are numerous campus groups that need petitions passed. Many would find your zeal for signature collection a real asset. You have great potential. You may need more after snubbing a major block of Missoula's professionals.

I have one question. You seem to be an assertive person, Ms. Sinistro, why didn't you just return their "little smiles" and say, "No thank you, Krishna Bless you, Hare, Hare, Hare . . ."

P.S. It is not the karma of the administration to procreate cattle.

A little good

Editor: Is there something wrong with promoting good? How about smiling? Or even old men? I enjoy all these nice things, but it seems some people on this campus don't.

I thought it was very refreshing to see the Gideon Internationalists out doing something good, and I feel spreading the word of God is good. I didn't feel they were pushy or obnoxious.

I was approached many times yesterday, and each time the men were more than pleasant — unlike all the petitioners on campus last spring, who were promoting everything from presidential candidates to the littering of garbage. I was so tired of dodging petitioners I didn't know what would give out first, my feet or my hand. Yet no one made any effort to have them removed from campus, and I'm glad. They and the Gideon men had a constitutional and a moral right to be here.

So I wonder, Melinda Sinistro, is it so bad to have people promoting something really good, or does it bother your conscience to see someone doing the Lord's work? You didn't like their smiles. Well, maybe if you had taken one of their little Bibles and read it, you would have something to smile about.

We experience enough bad and evil every day, so let's not discourage those who try to promote a little good.

William Udall
sophomore, pre-law

Gideons supported

Editor: I would like to speak out in support of the Gideons.

They are a group of businessmen, not clergymen, who contribute both their own dollars to purchase New Testaments and their valuable time to distribute them. Apparently they feel that our eternal destinies are important enough to warrant their time, efforts and cash. Their Bibles are not for sale; neither do they ask for contributions. It is a puzzle to me how the offer of a free gift can be offensive, even if made several times.

I am surprised to learn that a friendly smile is now considered to be obnoxious but perhaps that only applies to zoology students who have not yet figured out where cows come from.

Samurai, a classic trilogy of color films by Hiroshi Inagaki (who also directed Chushingura), stars the incomparable Toshiro Mifune (the "farmer's son"—buffonish member of Kurosawa's Seven Samurai, and hero of countless Japanese movies) as Mushashi Miyamoto, the real-life greatest swordsman of 17th-century Japan. Part I, The Legend of Mushashi, relates Mushashi's raising and education at the hands of monks who rescue him from an almost animal existence. Part II, Duel at Ichijoji Temple, shows him as a serious, matured, courteous man—also a brilliant duelist—who is sent into the world to gain spiritual experience. Each of these films stands on its own as a complete entertainment, but Mushashi's saga through the course of the three films is much more engrossing and rewarding than television's recent Shogun. District 96 candidates talk economics

By JEANETTE HORTICK
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Editor's note: This is the third article of an eight-part series on Missoula-area legislative candidates.

Although the two candidates for representative in House District 96 agree that Montana needs more economic development, they differ on how to go about accomplishing it.

Incumbent Jim Azzara, D-Missoula, would like to see more in-state businesses developed.

His Republican opponent, F. Janell Hopkins, favors attracting more business from outside the state.

District 96 runs from Higgins Avenue to Russell Street, bounded by Mount Avenue on the south and the Burlington Northern railroad tracks on the north.

Azzara, 31, favors using coal-tax trust funds to encourage local entrepreneurs. The funds Azzara refers to are those which come from the state's 30 percent coal severance tax on all coal extracted from Montana.

Half of this money is now invested outside the state, with the remainder going into the state's general fund. Azzara, however, said the money should be invested in Montana in order to make the state more self-sufficient.

He proposes the funds be used to build non-polluting, labor-intensive industries in Montana so that Montanans no longer need to depend on large eastern corporations, which he said do not care about social and environmental problems created by industry.

On the other hand, Hopkins, 22, a cashier-clerk at Rosauer's Supermarket in Missoula, said Montanans must go out-of-state to lure business.

She said the Anaconda Copper Co. shutdown was "a strong lesson" for Montanans to learn. She said Montanans did not appreciate the company when it was operating.

"Business is the 'golden goose' of America and people need to realize that, she said. If business is driven out, the country will fall because business is what made America, she added.

Hopkins believes a thriving economy and a quality environment can coexist, but environmental standards need to be slackened because they scare away business, she said. Non-polluting industry would be ideal, but in the meantime other businesses must be able to prosper, she said.

Since the coal-tax funds are viewed by many groups in Montana as a panacea to their problems, prudence must be used before doling the money out, Azzara said. He added that these funds are difficult for any particular group to get because it takes a three-fourths majority approval of both legislative houses to release the money.

While Azzara suggests the funds be used for attracting non-polluting industry, his opponent believes they should be used for public education, including the University of Montana.

UM is of special concern to both candidates. Hopkins said children are Montana's most valuable resource and their teachers must receive an adequate higher education. She said she will work with the Legislature to come up with a funding formula to replace the current 19-to-1 student-faculty ratio.

She emphasized the importance of upgrading UM because she said it is a very important economic asset to Missoula — a fact that Missoulians need to realize, she added. "Students provide a lot of business to local merchants," she said.

Azzara also said UM must not be allowed to decline any further and added he will continue to work with legislators to devise a new formula and then figure out a means to fund the formula.

The formula, he said, must allow for flexibility in determining graduate and special programs such as humanities, which do not work well under the 19-to-1 student-faculty ratio. It must also serve to attract and maintain good faculty, he added.

Another project Azzara said he would work on if re-elected is reform within the Legislature. The procedure, he said, is "chaotic" because representatives are besieged with too many bills during the transmittal time from one house to the other and near the end of the session.

He proposes to have annual sessions. During the even-numbered years, the Legislature could meet for 60 days and consider specific issues such as appropriations, and during the odd-numbered years, meet for 30 days and discuss other matters.

Both candidates said they strongly oppose government intervention in the private market.

Azzara, however, said he does support public power in Montana. The Montana Power Co., he said, is a monopoly and not a private enterprise and operates by laws that other businesses do not have in the free market. Secondly, utility companies differ from any other business because they deal with energy in an energy-short time and cause particular environmental problems, he said.

Corporations such as Montana Power are not concerned with such natural problems as acid rain, he said, and their profits are not put into conservation. Profits from a publicly owned power plant could be used for conservation, he maintained.

F. JANELL HOPKINS

He said Montana Power's current conservation efforts do not come out of corporate profits, but are taken out of the rate structure which customers pay.

Azzara wants to put the policy-making power into the hands of Montanans who must live with the industry, he said.

Both candidates said they would support some form of tax indexing depending on what plan the rest of the legislators come up with.

Azzara said money from excessive taxation should be returned to the taxpayers either by a direct rebate, which he admits could be costly to mail, or indirectly by decreasing the tax liability next year.

Hopkins suggested the surplus go into public education. If this were done, she said, there would be no need to call for special school bond levies which always have poor voter turnout.

Tomorrow's story will focus on the candidates for House District 98, Republican R. Budd Gould and Democrat Dennis Veteber.

Still converts waste to alcohol fuel

By MICHAEL CRATER
Montana Kaimin Reporter

It's stronger than a shot of whiskey, but don't drink it. It comes from agricultural wastes, but don't put it back in the soil. It was made over a wood fire, but it isn't cowboy coffee.

It's fuel. You can run a tractor or other farm equipment on it. For that matter, you could run your car on it, although it would cut your mileage about 5 percent.

Best of all, it's free. Any farmer in Lake County can have fuel made from his agricultural wastes or including the cost of the molasses. crops just by giving some to the fuel makers, American Agrifuels Inc.

Yesterday on the University of Montana campus AAI demonstrated its technique. Using the smallest of their four stills, Bill Dratz and two assistants made eight gallons of 140-proof alcohol. The process took about three-and-a-half hours.

The still they used is an odd-looking contraption, like the engine of an old locomotive. A wood fire in the bottom chamber heats a liquid in the middle chamber. The liquid yesterday was molasses, but Dratz said it could be any kind of agricultural product.

Recently, he said, the group has been using cooked and mashed potatoes. With something as starchy as potatoes, he said, costly special enzymes have to be added to convert the starch to sugar. He said sugary crops such as beets are much better, but "you can use practically anything."

As the sugary liquid is heated with brewer's yeast, it is converted into alcohol fumes. The fumes rise through a baffled tube, condensing and vaporizing as they rise, until at the top they have the desired alcohol content — at least 70 percent — and go down a narrow copper tube into a final condenser. The end result is a colorless liquid with a strong smell — fuel alcohol. Dratz said it costs about 80 cents a gallon to make,

In order to make sure the alcohol is used as fuel, Dratz said, some bleach is added. "That doesn't stop somebody from drinking it, but they sure turn white. You have to be really straight and follow the rules," he explained.

Dratz said the still is designed for use on a farm — a family farm, he emphasized, not a big corporate farm — and could produce all the fuel needed. "We're looking at converting entire farms over to alcohol fuel," he said.

As an added boon to farmers, the left-over liquid mash can be used as a high-protein feed for livestock.

"Anybody can have one of these in their back yard," he said. "I want to encourage you to try it. There's nothing mystical about making alcohol."

Dratz said alcohol is better fuel than gasoline because "it's non-polluting and it's better for your motor. It's less expensive and renewable; it is a solar fuel."

"I want you to see it as a full cycle, a solar cycle," he went on. "Farming is a solar industry. Making alcohol is, too."

The still used yesterday had a woodstove for its heat source, which Dratz admitted is inefficient. In fact, he said, "with this small still, you're using more energy than you get." But he said the larger stills do produce more energy than they consume, and soon the stills themselves may run on alcohol.

Bowers' plans on agenda

The Faculty Senate will consider University of Montana President Richard Bowers' career plans at their meeting today.

Bowers said when he accepted the position at UM that he envisioned a tenure period between six and nine years. He reminded the Executive Committee of the Faculty Senate that the university is now in that period, but that he has no plans for the immediate future.

The 1980-81 budget, library acquisitions, faculty development, legislative efforts, and long range planning will also be considered.

The Faculty Senate said the budget is balanced, and the $140,000 projected deficit at the time of the University Teachers' Union contract last spring has been made up. However, funds for equipment, supplies, and travel are said to be inadequate for 1980-81.

Other topics to be considered are the reorganization of the School of Education and the award of a posthumous degree to Steven Macheledt, who died of Hodgkins disease last July.

Reynolds gets censored on China trip

As a newsmen in Communist China, Missoulian Editorial Page Editor Sam Reynolds knew his work was open to censorship by the Chinese government.

Yet he didn't discover how such censorship had occurred until he returned to Missoula.

Speaking yesterday to about 50 people in the journalism school library, Reynolds said all his works reached home through the mail — except for one.

That one was about a "maniacal" Chinese driver, whom Reynolds named Horatio Hornblower. The story's opening lines began with concocted quotes attributed to the former Chinese Communist Party chairman, Mao Tse-tung. The lines were sarcastic and intended to amuse Missoulian readers, Reynolds explained.

But when Reynolds read the quotes to Hornblower, the man did not laugh.

Reynolds and two other American editors toured China for 20 days as part of an exchange program, which was arranged by the People's Daily newspaper in Peking and the U.S. International Communications Agency.

Reynolds said he found his Chinese hosts "impeccably courteous and friendly, but not too friendly." He said they were concerned that should the current Chinese government policy of encouraging relations with the United States revert to its chilly state a few years ago, they would be vulnerable to charges of being traitors.

Since the end of China's Cultural Revolution, in 1977, the media are now more free to operate, Reynolds said. Before, the press had been heavily censored by the government.

Although criticism of government actions in China is now becoming acceptable, reporters "may cross the party line — the fundamental national policy," Reynolds said.

They do not question the line; they are "gun-shy," Reynolds said. He added that the Chinese reporters are afraid if the party line suddenly changes, they will be caught and "later hurt."

Reporters are allowed to cover trials, Reynolds said, but before they file their stories they must get approval from the trial judge, a situation that is "outrageous by our standards."

Reynolds also visited a college campus in Peking and said the students were very interested in American things of an intellectual nature. In one classroom, he said, he was surprised when questioned about the "American psychological novel."

Reynolds said there is now "an official blessed interest" in being friendly with Americans and learning about our culture.

"We had an awfully good time," he said, calling the company congenial, the accommodations comfortable and the beer excellent.

Signs being planned for Rattlesnake

(AP)—Forest Service officials were planning signs, maps and other devices yesterday to let the public know about the boundaries and restrictions on the newly created wilderness portion of the Rattlesnake Wilderness and National Recreation Area north of Missoula.

Official word reached Lolo National Forest headquarters Tuesday that President Carter on Sunday had signed the bill creating the 61,350-acre area.

All vehicles are banned from the 33,000-acre wilderness portion.

"We're figuring out a sign plan and where we can put signs to best tell the public where the boundaries are," said Ed Deschamps, range conservationist for the Missoula Ranger District.

"We're also making a public handout map so we can tell the public where the boundaries are.

We're trying to do our best to inform people where the boundary of the wilderness is."

Forest Service workers will begin posting the signs in the next day or so at customary vehicle access places, but no patrolling, as such, is likely, Deschamps said. Not all of the signs will be posted before next spring or summer, he added.

Rangers can issue tickets to violators, but Deschamps said that probably would be done only in cases of willful violations. The minimum fine is $25.

CB agreed to provide the money. Spaulding said that the funds would be taken out of Winter Quarter's special allocations fund, which contains $5,000 at the beginning of each quarter.

CB also decided last night to reshuffle the ASUM tutoring program, putting it under the control of the Center for Student Development.

The program, started by ASUM, was taken over by Leisure Services last year after CB decided to cut back on its funding.

Earlier this quarter, however, Leisure Services Director Jim Ball told CB that his organization could not continue to fund the program.

The plan adopted last night would put the program under CSD control, but would have ASUM pick up its funding.

The amount of money that will be spent on the tutoring program will be discussed next week by ASUM's Budget and Finance Committee.

And on a lighter note, it appears that the proposed CB float for Saturday's Homecoming parade will not be built after all.

CB voted last week to construct the float, but last night, no CB member besides Float Committee Chairwoman Carrie Bender volunteered to work on it.
