"She [Petrilli] is, in the same breath, addressing urgent practical questions and thorny theoretical ones. She does so not only in her own way but also in a nuanced, probing, insightful, and illuminating manner."

—Vincent Colapietro, from the foreword

Susan Petrilli forges new paths where other theorists have not tread. By focusing on expression and interpretation in language, Petrilli investigates the possibility of changing the way we relate to the world, better engaging with others, and behaving more responsibly to improve the quality of life and for peace worldwide. This book offers precisely the new social, cultural and political insights that semiotics/biosemitics is capable of producing, and which we so urgently need. It develops the pathway of new thinking initiated with the global approach to signs and life in the direction of semioethics, while featuring the full scope of her important work on signs, language, communication, and of meaning, interpretation, and understanding.
