

Roaa Ali completed her PhD, titled “Arab American Drama Post 9/11: Cultural Discourses of an Othered Identity,” at the Department of Drama and Theatre Arts at the University of Birmingham (December 2015). She has presented her research at many international conferences, and she has published essays in The Bloomsbury Companion to Performance and Interculturalism (co-edited by Daphne Lei and Charlotte McIvor), Research in Drama Education: The Journal of Applied Theatre and Performance, Interdisciplinary Perspectives on Equality and Diversity, The Journal of Arts & Communities, and Al-Jadid Magazine.

Konstantinos Blatanis is Assistant Professor in American Literature and Culture at the Faculty of English Language and Literature, National and Kapodistrian University of Athens, Greece. His research interests include American literature, modern drama, popular culture, media studies, and critical theory. He is the author of the book Popular Culture Icons in Contemporary American Drama (Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 2003).

Virginia Dakari is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at the Department of American Literature and Culture at Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, Greece. Her Ph.D. dissertation, titled “Performing Cancer: Toward an Aesthetic of the Unpresentable,” seeks to construct a philosophical/theoretical/analytical framework that will accommodate the distinctive aesthetics of illness-related performance. She has participated in a number of international conferences and published various essays in academic journals and edited collections. Her current research focuses on the scope and implications of the critical turn in the field of Medical Humanities and its implementations in Greek academic, medical, and art spaces.

Elena Delliou is a PhD Candidate of American Theatre at the Department of American Literature and Culture at Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, Greece. Her thesis is on the modern American playwright Charles Mee and his (Re)making of Greek Tragedies and she has presented papers at international conferences on this topic. Her research focuses on modern and contemporary American drama, ancient and modern Greek theatre, and critical theory, and is also interested in literary and dramatic translation.

Christina Dokou is Assistant Professor of American Literature and Culture at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens, Greece. Her research interests include American Cultural Studies (especially Pop Americana), Gender Studies, and explorations of myth in modern literature, fields on which she has published several articles (in both English and Greek) and edited collections of essays.

Baz Kershaw is Professor Emeritus at Warwick University. He has published numerous books on theatre and performance as well as articles in international journals and essays in edited volumes. His writings have been republished in several international Readers and translated into Spanish, German, Chinese, Indonesian, Arabic and Turkish. He has written, directed and co-devised over 40 professional productions and projects. His research interests revolve around theatre/ performance ecologies, radicalism and politics, pedagogies of performance. In 2011, he was awarded Lifetime Membership of TaPRA in recognition of outstanding contributions to theatre and performance research internationally.

Chrysovalantis Kampragkos is Ph.D. student in the Department of American Literature and Culture, at the School of English of the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki. His research activities include conference presentations, publications, and participation in academic projects. His theoretical interests revolve around historical and political fiction, Marxism, and theories of globalization.

Ivan Lacko is an instructor of American literature in the Department of British and American Studies and senator to Comenius University's Academic Senate in Bratislava. His research interests focus on theatre and performance studies and, more particularly, the development of modern political theatre.

Jeremy Lester, PhD, is the head of the English with Shakespeare's project in Bologna and Visiting Professor at the Universities of Roma 3, Ca' Foscari, Venice and the École des Hautes Études Internationales – École des Hautes Études politiques in Paris. His publications include The Dialogue of Negation (2000); Stones of Resistance (2008); Six Characters in Search of a Dialogue (2007); Unframed Pictures: Tales from Latin America (2008).

HollyGale Millette is Senior Teaching Fellow within Winchester School of Art at the University of Southampton. She has taught art history and practice, cultural theory, pedagogy, critical thinking, research methodologies, and performance history. Her current writing and research encompass diaspora biography/autobiography, the turn to the Modern, musicianship and identity, socialist performance collectives in the Harlem Renaissance, and the performance philosophy of the Occupy Movement. She defines herself as an identity theorist working within the intermedial to map human geography and biography.

Efterpi Mitsi is Professor in English Literature and Culture at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens. She has published in the fields of early modern literature, focusing on word and image relations, and travel literature. Publications include essays in journals and edited volumes on Marlowe, Gosson, Sidney, More, British travelers to Greece; the volume Women Writing Greece: Essays in Hellenism, Orientalism and Travel (Rodopi, 2008), a collection of women's travel writing on Greece, In the Country of the Moon: British Women Travelers to Greece 1718-1932 (Estia, 2005), both with V. Kolocotroni, and the forthcoming volume The Letter of the Law: Literature, Justice and the Other (Peter Lang, 2013) with S. Dimakopoulou and C. Dokou.

Nicole Ollier is Professor of American Literature, Translation and Translation Studies at the University of Bordeaux-3. She has extensively researched and published in the fields of theatre, Caribbean, ethnic writings, Greek and Irish literary works.

Lina Rosi is Assistant Professor at the Department of Theatre Studies, University of Patras. Her research and teaching interests focus on the history and theory of 20th century European theatre, and the different theoretical paradigms that inform the study and analysis of theatre, drama and film (poststructuralism, psychoanalysis, cultural studies, postcolonial theories). Her publications include studies of contemporary French, Francophone and modern Greek playwrights.

Georgios Sampatakakis is Assistant Professor of Theatre Studies at the University of Patras, Greece. His areas of interest include Performance Studies, the Anthropology of Theatre, Theatre History and Theory, and Theatre Directing. He has published articles in many international journals and volumes, as well as four books in Greece.

Anna Stavrakopoulou is Associate Professor at the Department of Theatre Studies at Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, Greece. Her research interests revolve around comedy (popular and erudite), as well as theatrical translation. She is a founding member and part of the faculty team of Harvard Summer Program in Greece and Associate Director of the Harvard Center for Hellenic Studies-Greece (based in Nafplio). She has received grants from the Greek State Scholarships Foundation, Ilex Foundation and Bogliasco Foundation.

Anna Suwalska-Kolecka is Senior Lecturer at The State School of Higher Professional Education in Płock, Poland. She graduated at the Institute of English at Gdańsk University, where she completed her PhD on the function of time and space in the plays of Tom Stoppard. She has research interests in modern British drama and literary theory, especially in the structure and presentation of time and space. She has written on various aspects of modern and contemporary British, Irish, and American theater and performance.

Olga Taxidou is Professor of Theatre and Performance Studies at the University of Edinburgh. Her research interests lie mainly in the areas of modernist theatre and performance, adaptations of classical Greek drama and its reception in performance, theories of tragedy, tragedy and the philosophies of modernity.

Katerina Ziaka graduated from the School of English Language and Literature of Aristotle University of Thessaloniki in 1996. She received her M.A. in English Literature in 2000. Since 2002 she has been a Primary State School teacher. She received her Ph.D. in 2012 and her research interests are in the fields of contemporary political British theatre and psychopathology.