Dear alumni and friends,

As this academic year nears its end and I think back over all the tremendous accomplishments of our students, faculty, staff and alumni over recent months, I am filled with pride and optimism for the future of our great school. The pages of this magazine are filled with stories of new initiatives, historic milestones, bold ideas and inspiring philanthropy. These stories reflect the aspiration of this institution, to be a place that creates leaders for the global common good.

In these pages are also the names and faces of friends who have passed on, people whose legacy and impact will be felt for decades to come. Among them is Wayne Gittinger '57, who was a lifelong supporter of the University of Washington School of Law. In fact, the office that I'm writing this from is named after Wayne and his wife Anne. Wayne was always willing to serve on the school's boards and committees, and said yes to whatever was asked of him.

Last fall, we also lost Jack MacDonald, a 1940 graduate of our school. You will read about Jack's remarkable story in this issue and I think you'll be inspired by the same generosity, vision and fierce spirit that always impressed me when I spent time with Jack. He cared deeply for the University of Washington School of Law and was compelled to give back to the institution that he felt gave him so much. His investment will reach every corner of the law school and every student who studies here for generations.

There have also been happy occasions throughout this year. A few months ago, I got to attend the 100th birthday party of John Davis, a classmate of Jack's, at Davis, Wright, Tremaine, the law firm he founded. John is our oldest living alumnus, and as I looked around the room at this celebration, I got to see the faces of generations of attorneys influenced by this great man.

In the midst of these losses and celebrations, I was struck by the inspiring legacy our alumni offer. Our graduates exemplify giving and service and motivate me to continue to work hard to build the kind of school that serves not only our profession, but our world. This inspiration doesn't just live in the past, however. I see it every day in the faces of the students currently walking our halls, dedicating themselves to the study of law to make positive change and to solve the world's most pressing problems.

At a press conference last fall, I told the world that the future of the University of Washington School of Law has never been brighter. I believe that now more than ever. It is a belief founded on the generosity of our alumni, the dedication of our faculty and staff, the caliber of our students and the power of our community. Thank you for being a part of it.

U.S. SUPREME COURT JUSTICE

Sotomayor visits UW Law

JUSTICE SONIA SOTOMAYOR AND DEAN KELLYE TESTY

On March 10, 2014, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court Sonia Sotomayor visited UW Law and met with students, faculty, staff and guests to answer questions about her life, the legal profession and public service.

"We are extremely honored to have had the chance to welcome Justice Sonia Sotomayor to the University of Washington School of Law," said Dean Kellye Testy. "Having worked as a prosecutor, a federal judge, an appellate judge, as well as in private practice before her appointment to the Court, she was able to share unparalleled insights with members of our community about life as a lawyer and a jurist."

JUSTICE SOTOMAYOR TOOK QUESTIONS FROM UW LAW STUDENTS ABOUT THE LEGAL PROFESSION, CAREER PROSPECTS AND THE IMPORTANCE OF PUBLIC SERVICE

Sotomayor, who is the third woman and first Latina to sit on the U.S. Supreme Court, spoke about the importance of diversity in legal education as well as the need to teach students at a young age to be active citizens and agents of change.

"Justice Sotomayor's visit was a privilege and inspiration," said Assistant Professor Lisa Manheim. "We feel so fortunate to have benefited from her candor and generosity of spirit as she discussed a wide range of topics, including public education, overcoming adversity and the role of service in the legal profession."

Prior to her appearance at the law school, Justice Sotomayor spoke at the Husky Union Building to a crowd of 1,200 students, mostly undergraduates, as part of a book tour for My Beloved World, her 2013 autobiography that chronicles her journey from the South Bronx through her diverse legal career to her appointment to the Supreme Court. She also spoke at a Seattle Town Hall event later in the evening.

"We couldn't ask for a better example of someone who is a leader for the global common good," said Dean Testy. "Justice Sotomayor's historic visit and lifelong commitment to public service will offer inspiration to UW Law for years to come."

$1 Million to support public service at UW Law

To kick off 2014, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation announced a $1 million gift to the University of Washington School of Law in honor of William H. Gates Sr.'s 88th birthday. The gift will be used to fund efforts to support and expand public service law activities on campus. Gates Sr. received his law degree from the University of Washington School of Law in 1950.

"We are profoundly grateful for the Gates Foundation's incredible gift and continued support of our law school," said Kellye Testy, James W. Mifflin Professor of Law and Dean at UW Law. "The Gates family has been an extraordinary partner in our efforts to reinforce public service as a core value of our law school, and it is an honor to collaborate with them on efforts to promote justice and serve the common good."

The William H. Gates Public Service Law Program was established in 2005 with a founding gift from Bill and Melinda Gates, who wished to honor Gates Sr., a prominent Washington State attorney, for his career-long dedication to public service. The program awards five full scholarships on an annual basis to first-year students entering the UW School of Law J.D. program in exchange for a commitment to work in public service for five years following Continued support from the Gates Foundation from that time has led to the development of a centralized hub for all public service and public interest programs at the law school. Activities include providing public service advising for law students and alumni, supporting student organizations focused on public service/interest, enhancing collaborations with legal services and community organizations and administering a pro bono honors program.

Gates Sr. provided support for the hiring of an Assistant Director in 2010 to support these expanded activities and the most recent gift from the Gates Foundation will ensure that this position, which was scheduled to expire in 2015, will be in place for another ten years.

ANNIVERSARY

PROFESSOR JACKIE MCMURTRIE WITH KEYNOTE SPEAKER BRIAN BANKS

On April 4, 2013, the Innocence Project Northwest (IPNW) celebrated its 15th anniversary with an awards dinner and celebration. Current and former students, volunteers and community members gathered to pay tribute to IPNW exonerees who have fought to regain freedom from wrongful imprisonment in Washington and honor the 2013 award recipients.

The event featured a keynote address by NFL player Brian Banks. Exonerated after a wrongful rape conviction in California, Banks recounted his fight to clear his name and resume a dream of joining the NFL. Banks offered inspiration to Washington's exonerees and resounding support for the work being done by IPNW.

PAUL STATLER, ROBERT LARSON AND TYLER GASSMAN, RECENT EXONEREES AT THE IPNW CELEBRATION

IPNW honored its 2013 award winners: Innocence Champions Jack and Leslie Hamman, for their advocacy and the impact of their award-winning book, On American Soil: How Justice Became a Casualty of WWII; Innocence Advocate Congressman Adam Smith, whose vigilant efforts helped secure the release of UW alumnus Jason Puracal who was wrongly imprisoned in Nicaragua; and Pro Bono Award recipient Joseph Pierce, a criminal defense and civil rights attorney who has devoted hundreds of pro bono hours working on IPNW cases and supporting efforts to advocate for the wrongfully accused.

In addition to celebrating its 15-year anniversary, IPNW also achieved other significant successes in recent months. It represented five of seven clients who were exonerated in Washington State in 2013, leading the state to rank 4th in the nation for exonerations last year, and was called "an extraordinary asset for Washington State and rule of law in our democracy" by the Seattle Times in an editorial. Professor Jackie McMurtrie, IPNW's founder and director, was also awarded the William O. Douglas lifetime achievement award in November 2013, the highest honor from Washington State's American Civil Liberties Union.

UW Law part of innovative

Tech Policy Lab

In September 2013, the University of Washington announced the launch of a pioneering laboratory designed to examine cutting-edge issues such as cybersecurity, consumer privacy and online censorship, and to improve national policies on new technologies. Dean Kellye Testy and Professor Ryan Calo joined leaders from UW and Microsoft in announcing the launch of the Lab and Microsoft's founding gift of $1.7 million.

"In a nation where technology moves at an everrapid rate, policymakers can lack the technical knowledge they need to address how networks, devices and software operate, so the Lab's deeply interdisciplinary approach to addressing these issues marks a creative, critical step forward," said Ryan Calo, Assistant Professor at the UW's School of Law and one of the Lab's three founding directors along with UW Associate Professor Tadayoshi Kohno, from Computer Science and Engineering, and Professor Batya Friedman, from the Information School.

In bringing together experts from the three schools, the Lab serves as both an intellectual hub and resource center for both policymakers and technologists. Research will focus on complex policy issues emerging from 21st century technology, including online privacy, piracy, big data, public records access and wearable technology, and on improving technology policy outcomes.

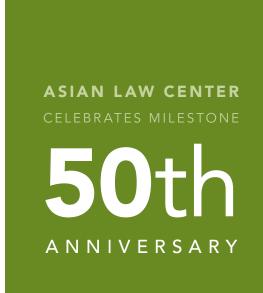

Lab teams comprised of both students and faculty will identify, test and examine new technologies in order to provide policymakers with a rigorous research base and evidence-based recommendations for decision-making.

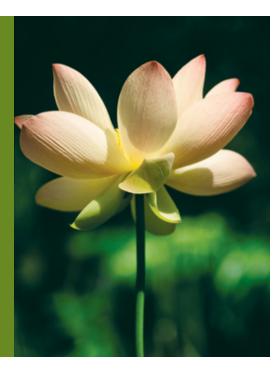

To address these and related questions, the founding directors hope to create publications, training sessions and suites of tools to enable policymakers to better understand what the technological implications of regulatory decisions might be. Reciprocally, the Lab will help technologists understand how their technical decisions interact with current policies and provide tools to support dialogue between technologists and policymakers. The Lab will also service legislative staffers, academics, counsel and press working on technology issues.

UW PRESIDENT MICHAEL YOUNG, DEAN KELLYE TESTY
AND PROFESSOR RYAN CALO ANNOUNCE THE LAUNCH OF THE TECH POLICY LAB WITH THE LAB'S CO-DIRECTORS AND LEADERS FROM MICROSOFT

"The brilliance of this Lab – perhaps the first of its kind in the world – lies in bringing computer scientists and engineers together with legal and policy experts to help improve technology policy," said Microsoft Executive Vice President and General Counsel Brad Smith. "The Tech Policy Lab will help policymakers keep up with the pace of technical innovation."

UW Law's Asian Law Center (ALC) recently commemorated its 50th anniversary with a year-long celebration, including a special event on June 13, 2013 recognizing the lifetime achievements of five distinguished alumni throughout Asia: Mr. Tasuku Matsuo M.C.L '69, from Japan; Mr. C.J. Kim Ph.D. '72, from Korea; Mr. Liu Guoyuan LL.M. '82, from China; Mr. Erman Rajagukguk LL.M. '84, Ph.D '88, from Indonesia; and Mr. Tay-sheng Wang LL.M. '90, Ph.D. '92, from Taiwan.

Distinguished Japanese scholar Dan Fenno Henderson took over as director of what was then called the Asian Law Program in the early 1960s and laid the foundation for the pioneering program, the oldest center of its kind in the United States. Renamed the Asian Law Center at the turn of the 21st century, it has been recognized worldwide as a preeminent center of classical scholarship, teaching and public policy work on Asian and comparative law.

UW LAW ALUMNI AND ALC HONOREES CELEBRATE THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY

The impact of the program is now felt around the globe, with multiple generations of LL.M. and Ph.D. graduates serving as leaders in all areas of law, business, government and academia. Many return to their home countries to influence profound economic, political, academic and legal reforms. "These graduates are people with well-developed social consciences and a real sense of public service," said Senior Advisor Veronica Taylor, former director of the center.

Alumni join the international network of legal expertise that is rooted in both deep scholarship and friendship – relationships forged over rigorous study, lively debate and multi-lingual, multi-cultural exchanges at the center. Those bonds, said Professor Jon Eddy, a 1969 UW law school graduate and former director of the center, "become a living, continuing legal education program as our graduates interact over the years among themselves and with us."

The award recipients at the event last June also referenced these bonds, with each honoree saying how much the faculty, staff, librarians and fellow students from UW Law meant to their education and propelled them to where they are today.

The accomplishments of the honorees speak to the heart of the program, and to its survival, said Eddy. "That is the real mark of the success and importance of the program, and that is its real continuing legacy."

LAW SCHOOL news

Students, alumni and distinguished guests celebrate a turning point for the Sustainable International Development Law LL.M.

A special gathering marks a major milestone, honors an esteemed founder and sets sights on the next generation of global leaders.

"Time flies when you are out changing the world."

With those words, UW School of Law Dean Kellye Testy saluted Professor Emeritus Roy Prosterman at the 20th anniversary celebration for the Sustainable International Development Law LL.M., a graduate program he founded.

The program concentrates on using the law as a tool for justice and poverty alleviation in developing countries, while also protecting the planet and conserving its resources for future generations. While at UW Law, SID students learn about multiple avenues to address these challenges from the rule of law and governance to international environmental law, social entrepreneurship and corporate social responsibility.

"It's a remarkable achievement, Roy," said Dean Testy. "We have alumni working all over the world." About 100 students, alumni and distinguished guests braved a chilly February night to come together in the warmly-lit and collegial confines of Senators Magnuson and Jackson Trial Courtroom of William H. Gates Hall.

In addition to commemorating the anniversary milestone, Testy leveraged the opportunity to look ahead and gently steer the program further into the 21st century. Introducing UW School of Law professor Anita Ramasastry, SID director since 2013, Testy promised the law school would build on the significant legacy. The SID program, Testy vowed, will continue to educate leaders for the global common good, a "centerpiece of the law school's mission."

The law school and its SID graduate program, of course, play to the natural strengths of their prime location — a vibrant, thriving Pacific Rim gateway city priding itself on being outward-looking, internationally engaged and ahead of the intellectual, social and geopolitical arc.

As she takes over directorship of the program, Ramasastry expects to provide students with new tools and more practical training during their studies. She enthusiastically highlights current students who are championing a wide range of international human rights issues from global health to climate disruption. Ramasastry cites multiple examples: one student devotes his studies to the underlying causes of human trafficking in the Philippines and the role business can play in helping victims to rebuild their lives. Another assists lawyers in developing countries in filing environmental lawsuits against mining companies. Another current student strives to improve the criminal justice system in her native Uganda. Sick of the blanket of toxic smog that hangs over parts of China, a Chinese student is determined to use law and the courts to confront air quality evils.

"They are tackling the new challenges of the 21st century," Ramasastry said, "and we want to equip them to rise to those challenges."

During the year in the SID program, students take practice-based classes, which are designed to develop strong practitioners, Ramasastry said. One of these courses focuses on global corruption, dubbed "a challenge for all of our students." The program allows students to develop real-world skills while forging connections with NGOs, she said.

REINTRODUCING THE NEW DIRECTOR

Ramasastry knows the modern, global playing field as well as its seemingly insurmountable complex challenges. She has taught at UW Law for 17 years. She earned high-level experience in international development law on the global stage. Most recently, she was a senior advisor in the Obama Administration working in the International Trade Administration of the U.S. Department of Commerce on anti-corruption, business and human rights and trade policy in emerging markets such as Vietnam, Colombia, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, Turkey and Indonesia.

An expert in the fields of business and human rights, anti-corruption and commercial law and development, Ramasastry's scholarly work centers around the impact of commercial law on economic growth and development. She has advised the World Bank, U.S. Agency for International Development and many other development organizations.

The SID program now boasts 20 current participants. Among other cutting edge topics, they study specific courses in law as a tool of poverty alleviation, global environmental protection and corporate responsibility.

Two clinical opportunities for experiential learning punctuate the program: one targeting international development, one focused on human rights.

Perhaps the most significant recent development has been the inclusion of students from a new fellowship program that provides specialized legal education in economic development. The Barer Institute for Law and Global Human Services, established by Stan Barer, '63, and his wife, Alta, began in 2012-13 to bring skilled practitioners from lower and middle income countries for a year of study at UW School of Law.

"The unification of the Barer Fellows program with the SID program is truly revolutionary," Testy said.

This year's Barer Fellows hail from diverse backgrounds including human-rights, anti-human trafficking and intellectual property. Fellows this year are: Akello Florence Owinji, Uganda; Benjamin E. Aritao, Jr., Philippines; Charles Mutasa, Zimbabwe; Stella Wangechi Ngotho, Kenya; Hon. Lorraine Dinna Ogombe, Kenya; Tin Nyo Nyo Thoung, Mynamar.

"Tonight signifies and confirms to us that we are part of a global movement," human rights lawyer and current Barer Fellow Stella Wangechi Ngotho said at the anniversary party.

At a very young age, she realized she wanted to be a human rights lawyer dealing with victims of historical injustice. She thought coming to the UW to study would be daunting, but she acclimated quickly. "The SID program is multi-disciplinary and cuts across the board in a big way," she said. "It makes us look at the world in a very new and different perspective."

A member of the class of 2014, she sees things differently than when she started. "The SID program has bequeathed me with such strong mental tools that I cannot wait to get back to Kenya to implement all the opportunities that I see for my country. I am very blessed and grateful and I cannot wait to create opportunities for others, the same way opportunities were created for me."

Among the SID LL.M. alumni who are applying their skills in related professional careers is Yoichi Shio, Director, Law and Justice Division, Governance Group, for the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA). JICA is an independent government agency that coordinates official development assistance around the world. It is tasked with assisting economic and social growth in developing countries. In short, it is the Japanese equivalent of USAID.

Shio graduated from the SID program in 2004 but navigated a homecoming to help celebrate the program's 20th anniversary. "What I learned in Sustainable International Development really helped me to perform my duties," he said. "Professors enlightened and influenced me to this day." He also praised the "ideal environment for study," the close-knit group of fellow international students and the network of alumni around the world, "especially in Asia."

"In my work, in the development field, we face many challenges," Shio said. "Sustainable International Development is ideal training for finding solutions to those situations. I am very proud that SID is my alma mater. I hope the SID program keeps growing for the next 20 years."

DEAN KELLYEY, TESTY CELEBRATING 20 YEARS OF THE SID PROGRAM WITH PROFESSOR ROY PROSTERMAN. PROFESSOR ANITA RAMASASTRY AND OTHERS

Speaker after speaker praised Prosterman, a world-renown land rights advocate, for championing land tenure reform for the planet's poorest people. In addition to launching the graduate program, he founded and built up a leading nonprofit, Landesa (formerly called the Rural Development Institute) that has made a huge impact reducing poverty around the globe. The UW School of Law has long enjoyed strong institutional ties with Landesa, which currently employs at least a dozen UW School of Law graduates, many of them SID alumni.

In all, over 100 Landesa employees engage governments, aid agencies and NGOs in India, China and countries in Africa – more than 50 countries in all. Over the years, Landesa won the attention of heads of state, political dignitaries and powerful global development agencies. Landesa actively advised lawmakers and had a direct role in helping millions of families own the land they farm.

After students and alumni gave Prosterman a standing ovation for his work at Landesa and the law school, he smiled and said he was overwhelmed.

Instead of reminiscing about the past, the revered law professor outlined goals for the next 20 years of international development.

The multi-cultural, multi-generational audience hung on his every word. His presentation – at once scholarly, lawyerly and replete with dramatic personal anecdotes about international adventure in some dangerous places – enchanted the admiring listeners.

Among the lofty goals for international development he firmly believes are within reach: establishing more "house-and-garden" plots for the world's poor (small, roughly tennis court-size parcels that can provide food and income); expanding micro-credit programs; and improving women's land rights.

Concluding his remarks, Prosterman insisted on sharing the credit for the success of Landesa and SID. "Keep in mind it was a group effort," he said earnestly. "I may be the public face for some but much of the work was done by others." To seal the point, he called out several longtime colleagues in attendance.

Among those alumni was UW Vice Provost for Global Affairs, Jeffrey Riedinger. A 1980 graduate of the law school, he initially came to the university to study with Professor Prosterman and became his research assistant. They traversed the planet, reinforcing the belief that secure land tenure is crucial to sustainable international development, particularly in countries where agriculture is prominent but many households are landless.

In heartfelt remarks, Riedinger called Prosterman passionate and persistent. "He made a huge difference in thousands of peoples' lives."

WILLIAM H. GATES SR., CO-CHAIR OF THE BILL & MELINDA GATES FOUNDATION

Landesa CEO Tim Hanstad Hanstad '95 also chose to attend UW Law to study under Prosterman and wound up forging a lasting partnership. In his remarks, he pointed out that Landesa was "birthed in this law school" and noted that Landesa employs more SID graduates than any other enterprise.

"Roy is an absolutely remarkable human being," Hanstad said. "He epitomizes integrity, generosity, altruism. Roy, thank you for the gift you have given to the law school, to humankind and to my family. You truly personify a leader for the global common good."

Over the years, Landesa secured funding from leading charities and individual donors including the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation. USAID and the World Bank also contract with Landesa — now headquarted in downtown Seattle — as research consultants.

In a statement for UW LAW magazine, William H. Gates Sr., co-chair of the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, enthusiastically applauded the mildmannered but extremely influential professor.

"It is not often that an organization, inspired by the convictions of a single person, becomes the producer of individual land rights in a long list of countries including India and China. Roy Prosterman has done just that and it is awesome," Gates wrote.

In 2006, Prosterman won the prestigious Henry R. Kravis prize for nonprofit leadership from Claremont McKenna College. The prize selection committee called Landesa "an extraordinarily effective advocate for international land law and policy." It described Prosterman as a "worldwide champion of land rights for the world's poor." He donated the $250,000 prize to his innovative institute.

Landesa works to help families secure rights to land so that they can sustainably grow their harvests and reap the benefits of their labor.

Ramasastry's work embraces that legacy, with the mission of extending it far into the future, ensuring that future generations of UW Law graduates keep on changing the world.

MEET THE BARER FELLOWS

As part of the Barer Institute for Law and Global Human Services, created in 2010 to focus on the multidisciplinary role of law in promoting health, education and economic development, UW Law has welcomed the second class of Barer Fellows to the law school.

Benjamin E. Aritao, Jr. Philippines

RESEARCH INTERESTS: Social Business/Enterprise, Anti-Human Trafficking

PROGRAM: LL.M. in Sustainable International Development Law

How will you apply what you've learned when you return home?

First, I am inspired to continue my work in preventing human trafficking as well as providing a new future for the victims in my home country. As co-founder of a social enterprise that provides livelihoods to survivors of human trafficking and to those that are at risk, I know we are part of a larger global effort against trafficking that is continually growing. Second, I feel significantly more equipped to share the lessons learned as a lawyer and what we are learning as social entrepreneurs. I plan to support the recently filed Philippine House Bill on social enterprises and make recommendations based on my studies as a Barer Fellow, as well as my experience on the ground. Third, I am more aware of the importance of the judicial system and of having the kind of rule of law that truly benefits society.

Stella W. Ngotho Kenya

RESEARCH INTERESTS: Business and Human Rights, International Human Rights Law

PROGRAM: LL.M. in Sustainable International Development Law

What inspired you to apply for this Fellowship? I had reached a point in my life where I felt the need for intellectual and social stimulation, to get out of my comfort zone, travel and interact with people from all over the world. I wanted an opportunity to share the knowledge I had acquired from my human rights experience in East Africa and also learn from other people's experiences and interests.

Tin Nyo Nyo Thuoung Myanmar

RESEARCH INTERESTS: Global Business, Corporate Law

PROGRAM: Visiting Scholar

How will your course of study influence your work? Since Myanmar changed its political system to a democracy about three years ago, we are trying to fill in in gaps in our knowledge and approaches to current development issues. The Barer Fellowship will help fill some of Myanmar's knowledge gaps. Learning why the rule of law and sustainable development are critical to Myanmar's future will influence my daily work at the Attorney General's Office.

Lorraine Ogombe

RESEARCH INTERESTS: Intellectual Property, Criminal Law

PROGRAM: LL.M. in Intellectual Property

What has been a highlight of your fellowship? I have enjoyed the cultural and professional diversity among the Barer Fellows and, in fact, among the entire University of Washington School of Law. As a result of this diversity I have learned vital lessons in interacting and socializing with people from different backgrounds, skills I can apply to my work as a Kenyan Magistrate. Outside, the classroom, I have been fortunate to interact with attorneys from the oldest and largest law office in Seattle, K&L Gates. My professional mentor from this office, Kate Spelman, has been generous in sharing her time and vast experience in intellectual property and law practice in the U.S.

Florence Owinji Akello Uganda

RESEARCH INTERESTS: Human Rights, Rule of Law, International Criminal Court, Sustainable Development

PROGRAM: LL.M. in Sustainable International Development Law

What is the most important thing you've learned during your course of study? I have realized that Uganda, like many countries, is full of many problems but lacking solutions. Poor administration of justice and human rights abuses are some factors affecting development. In Uganda, observance of human rights still remains a very great challenge. Uganda recently passed an anti-pornography law, the first of its kind in the region, prohibiting women from wearing miniskirts and revealing blouses. This law violates a woman's fundamental right to liberty and free association. I hope that lessons learned from this program will help me provide support to women through advocacy to know their rights, and I urge the Ugandan government not to sit back and watch women's right continue to be abused in such a manner. The sections in the law that undermine the dignity of a woman should be revised or deleted.

Charles Mutasa Zimbabwe

RESEARCH INTERESTS: Human Rights, Governance, Health, Poverty Reduction, Land Issues, Civil Society

PROGRAM: LL.M. in Sustainable International Development Law

How will you apply what you've learned when you return home?

There are a number of take home lessons for me. Most importantly, learning how the rule of law links to development and how it can be used to impact development. I now understand that the land tenure issues and legal reforms in my country hold the key to production and sustainable development.

A CLOSER LOOK AT THE MAN WHO LEFT UW LAW THE LARGEST GIFT IN THE SCHOOL'S HISTORY,

AND WHOSE GENEROSITY MADE HEADLINES AROUND THE WORLD

Jack MacDonald, a 1940 graduate of the University of Washington School of Law, who lived the majority of his life with purposeful secrecy and frugality, gained widespread, international attention in the fall of 2013 for the "secret" fortune he had built, and then gave away, following his death on September 13, 2013.

MacDonald bequeathed nearly $187 million to the three causes he cared most about: the UW School of Law, Seattle Children's Research Institute and the Salvation Army. The $56.1 million he designated to the School of Law, the largest gift in the school's history, will create, among other things, an endowed chair and support scholarships for law students and the programs that empower them to make positive change in the world.

"The UW was good to me," MacDonald once said. "I felt I owed them something as long as I was able."

While the size of MacDonald's gift, the largest philanthropic gift in Washington state last year and the sixth largest in the country, was certainly notable, it was MacDonald's personal story that caught the attention of the world.

C. HENRY HECKENDORN '48, JOHN DAVIS '40, DEAN TESTY AND JACK MACDONALD AT THE 2011 GOLDEN ALUMNI REUNION LUNCHEON

THE SECRET MILLIONAIRE

Jack MacDonald was born in Prince Rupert, British Columbia on May 5, 1915. His paternal grandfather, Alexander MacDonald emigrated from Scotland to Ontario in the 1830s and operated a mill there until moving his family west. When he was three years old, Jack MacDonald moved with his family to Seattle where his father, Frederick MacDonald, started a successful meat packing business in the city.

Jack attended college at UW, and after graduating from law school, served in the United States Army in the South Pacific during World War II. He then returned to Seattle and worked for 30 years as an attorney for the Veterans Administration. During that time, he inherited money that his parents had earned from MacDonald Meat Co. and began stewarding the family trust. He spent his spare time studying the stock market and reading the Wall Street Journal, and as his investment portfolio grew, so did his reputation for extreme frugality.

MacDonald clipped coupons from newspapers, rode the bus around Seattle and purposefully wore old clothing in an attempt not to look "rich." He once bought an entire freezer's worth of frozen orange juice, simply because it was on sale. He was a frequent attendee of UW Law's Golden Alumni Reunion lunches, which he would arrive at by bus. "Jack would come up and greet me with holes in his sweater and tell me he got dressed up for me," recalled Dean Kellye Testy. It was these aspects of his personality that captivated the public's attention following the announcement of his historic gift. Prior to November 2013, only a small circle of family and friends knew that MacDonald had been quietly accumulating a sizeable fortune. On November 26, 2013, two days before Thanksgiving, the three beneficiaries held a press conference, announcing the gift. Within hours, the story went viral, garnering press coverage around the world.

MACDONALD CLIPPED COUPONS FROM NEWSPAPERS, RODE THE BUS AROUND SEATTLE, AND PURPOSEFULLY WORE OLD CLOTHING IN AN ATTEMPT NOT TO LOOK "RICH."

ABC News, USA Today, Good Morning America, the Huffington Post and NPR all ran stories about the gift, not to mention hundreds of other media outlets across the globe. Jack's "secret" fortune wasn't a secret anymore.

THE MAN BEHIND THE HEADLINES

Watching this unfolding media frenzy was Regen Dennis, Jack's stepdaughter. In 1971, he had married her mother, Mary Katherine Moore, who he met working at the Veteran's Administration. Dennis recently attended UW Law's annual event for friends and alumni of the law school in Palm Springs, CA and took the time to answer a few questions about what life was like with Jack and what the media might have missed.

"When Jack married my mom, my brother and I barely knew him," said Dennis. "He was a quiet, shy attorney and a man of routine who did nothing for fun. My mom opened the doors to his world. She was vivacious and very social and right away they began to entertain, travel and go to parties."

When asked about MacDonald's legal career,
Dennis said that Jack rarely spoke about himself or the early years of his life, but was clearly proud of his education from the University of Washington School of Law. "He went to all the bar conventions and closely followed the careers of his law school colleagues," she said. "He was honored to be in their ranks and felt strongly that his legal education at UW Law gave him the tools not only to have a long and successful career, but also to manage his family's trust. He believed that a background in law was the basis for understanding politics and business and society."

Jack didn't keep the trust a secret from his stepchildren, but only spoke with them openly about it after their mother had passed away. Following a health scare eight years ago, Jack asked Ms. Dennis to write his obituary, so he could know what it would eventually say. At that time, he made it very clear that he wanted to be remembered as a philanthropist. "I'm sure he never imagined how famous he would be," said Dennis. "For the past fifteen years, I had followed the valuations of his trust," she continued, "so I was sure when he passed away and this all became public that it would cause quite a stir. It's a great tale of a quirky man who lived frugally and

When asked to elaborate about her stepfather's philanthropic legacy and what he hoped his gift to UW Law would accomplish, Ms. Dennis said it was Jack's hope to help young, bright, ambitious students achieve life success. "Just as he would love to know that his donations to Seattle Children's might result in a major medical breakthrough and his donations to the Salvation Army might result in rescuing some down-and-out folks in order to get them back on the road to self-support, he would most want his donations to the law school to result in the successes of lawyers who would honor his legacy of integrity, common sense and generosity."

"Jack's integrity was unwavering," Dennis concluded. "He was unquestionably fair to everyone. He was an example of sensible investing, frugal living, unselfish giving and a strong loyalty to his family. What a guy."

Enjoyed Every Minute of It

By Sharon Ernst

Professor Eric Schnapper argued his first case before the U.S. Supreme Court during President Nixon's first term. Since then, he has argued 17 additional cases before the Court, and filed briefs in 70 more.

Schnapper has been a Professor of Law at the University of Washington School of Law since 1995. He is also one of the leading appellate attorneys representing workers in employment law cases in the U.S. and has a long track record appearing before our nation's highest court.

In his 18th appearance in front of the Court on November 4, 2013, Schnapper argued Sandifer v. U.S. Steel Corp. He argued that the protective gear worn by unionized steelworkers is not clothing. If clothing, workers do not have to be compensated for the time spent putting the protective gear on before work and taking it off after, because federal law excludes time spent changing clothes from the time unionized workers are paid. Professor Schnapper argued this protective gear wasn't clothing, and that the time spent donning and removing the protective gear is time that should be compensated. On January 27, 2014, the Court sided with U.S. Steel Corp.

Although the steelworkers didn't win their case, the hearing itself won notoriety for the lively banter and unusual topics discussed. The proceedings included references to thorns, bird hunting, the South Pole, neck braces, chain mail and knife scabbards, among several other unusual subjects. Megan Garber of The Atlantic described the oral argument as "...amazing. As in, one-for-the-record-books, court-case-as-epic-literature amazing." She also referred to it as the "most delightful Supreme Court argument in history."

We asked Professor Schnapper about this particular case, as well as what it's like to be in front of the Supreme Court, how he prepares, and how it has changed since he first stood in front of nine justices 40 years ago.

Q: What do you think made the steelworkers' argument so interesting?

A: I think what made it interesting to someone who wasn't steeped in the details of legal issues is that the case really turns on a common sense question which is, "What sort of things do people call clothes?" A number of lower courts had held that anything a person could wear would be clothes and that would include a watch or a toupee or a henna decal on your face. That's clearly wrong, but it's really hard to articulate and delineate exactly which things people call clothes and which things they don't. So it was a very funny argument at times while the Court struggled with things like airbag vests that horseback riders wear or agua lungs or things like that.

Q: You've argued before the Court on many occasions. How does it differ from being in front of other courts?

A: It's different first of all because there are a lot more people there than in your typical lower court. Also, you get barraged with questions. You spend almost all of your time just answering questions. There's a real range of views on the Court too. And they're not trying just to figure out who should win this case, but what the general rule in this area of the law should be.

It's also different because you're aware when you're doing it that you're getting these questions from people who are really historic figures. Every lawyer knows the names of every one of the justices and the chief justice. You get a question from Justice Kennedy, and it's like an argument about the meaning of the Constitution with one of the founding fathers. These are just famous, historical people. We've all read opinions by everybody on that bench. As Pete Carroll said when the Seahawks beat San Francisco and were going to the Super Bowl, "How cool is this?" and the answer is, "It's really cool!" You never get tired of this. It's very fun.

PROFESSOR ERIC SCHNAPPER WITH CO-COUNSEL AND CLIENTS AFTER ARGUING BEFORE THE SUPREME COURT IN NOVEMBER, 2013

Q: You've been arguing cases in front of the Court for over 40 years. How is it different now compared to when you first started?

A: I think the main difference is the Court asks a lot more questions now than it used to. The other difference is, the Court is hearing about half as many arguments as it did in the 1970s. That may be related to the number of questions you get because they've got twice as much time to prepare for each case. And I'd say now you're very aware of who the swing justice is if it's going to break in a 5-4 way.

Q: How do you prepare to go before the Supreme Court?

A: The largest part of it is trying to figure out the questions that I'll be asked. By the time I'm done, I'll have identified 50 to 100 different questions. Then I try to think out not just "the" answer, but three or four or five answers because sometimes the way the question is phrased calls for a different kind of answer. Sometimes you have to have more to say than you'd use at first blush. You give a short answer and hope not to spend more on it, but you have more to say if it goes that way.

You also spend some time thinking about what general points you want to try to get across, although you don't have a lot of control over that. You think a fair amount about what you're going to say in the first couple of sentences. Sometimes you get a half sentence out and sometimes a whole page. But you never know how much time you're going to get before the justices start asking questions, so you have to plan for a couple of minutes, knowing that might not happen.

Sometimes you spend a certain amount of time mastering details, section numbers or where things are in the record, although that was not a big deal in the steelworkers' case.

Q: You take on these cases pro bono. Why is that?

A: Because I'm delighted to be able to do this sort of thing and you can't do this kind of work for money because the clients don't have any money to pay you. So if you want to do it, you do it for free and I'm happy to do it. I'd much rather be doing this than helping some big corporation sue some other big corporation.

Q: How do you choose which cases you will take on?

A: If I've got a case that's been decided in the Court of Appeals and the question is, should I try to help the plaintiff side get to the Supreme Court, those choices are governed to some extent by the kinds of cases the Court will take. If there's a reasonable chance the Court will take it and I think the plaintiff's position is right, then I am happy to take the case on.

Q: Do you have a favorite moment from your 40 years of experience with the Supreme Court?

A: Definitely yes! My favorite moment happened in November this past year when I moved my son's admission to the Supreme Court bar. It was a something I'd been looking forward to doing ever since I heard he was interested in going to law school many years ago.

LAW DEGREE PROPELS YOICHI SHIO '04. ON GLOBAL STAGE

By Stuart Glascock

A Law Degree in Action

Alumnus takes his LL.M. in Law and Sustainable International Development to a global platform as head of a major division of a leading international aid agency.

Before he started his LL.M. in Law and Sustainable International Development, Yoichi Shio had already earned a law degree and garnered valuable professional experience. He had also forged ambitious intentions for his graduate education.

In fact, he knew exactly what he wanted from graduate school: to understand rule of law systems, to closely relate his studies to his chosen vocation and to pass the bar exam and be admitted to practice.

BY ALL ACCOUNTS, HE ACHIEVED THOSE GOALS.

Then, after he finished his LL.M., he rolled up his sleeves and dug in after landing a dream job within his field. Shio heads a division of the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA). The 1,800-employee government agency is Japan's equivalent of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). Like USAID, JICA works with countries on every continent supporting critical improvement projects such as building bridges, schools, roads, ports–and judicial systems.

"I am head of a division which handles rule of law systems," he said in an interview. "I have many opportunities to work with professionals from different organizations, legal professionals from Japan and also from abroad. In those daily activities, what I learned (at UW Law) is very useful."

Shio has directed a number of Japan's technical assistance projects. He has spearheaded such projects with Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar, China, Mongolia, Uzbekistan, Nepal, Indonesia, East Timor, the Philippines and other Asian and African countries. Last year, he led JICA's mission to Myanmar to establish a new technical assistance project with the Attorney General's Office and the Supreme Court.

"What I learned in SID really helps me in what I do," Shio said. "It gave me confidence when I discuss international law with my colleagues."

In internal documents, Tokyo-based JICA calls for "the sound development of the Japanese and global economy by supporting the socioeconomic development, recovery or economic stability of developing regions."

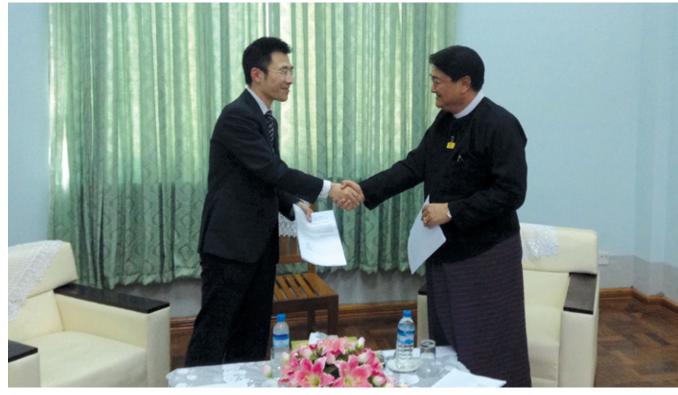

Shio directs JICA's Law and Justice Division, responsible for a gamut of legal aid projects. They range from helping write new legislation to improving policies at prosecutors' offices and ministries of justice. The division also aims to improve access to justice systems in developing countries, and it supports legal assistance to the poor.

GRADUATE STUDIES LINK TO GLOBAL PROJECTS

Earlier this year, UW Law professor and SID program director Anita Ramasastry introduced her former student at a 20th anniversary celebration for the graduate program. "I am so pleased that he was able to join us from Japan," she said. "He has had a remarkable career. He was such a wonderful student when he was here. We are so pleased that he has gone forth and works in the field."

Before UW, Shio worked in Vietnam for a couple of years after receiving his law degree from the University of Tokyo, but he wanted to understand the legal system in the United States. His Japanese legal education was grounded in theory, he said, but it did not focus on actual cases. Legal experts from various international aid agencies advised him to attend graduate school in the United States. After careful research, he chose UW School of Law.

While in the SID program, "I learned how the rule of law evolved in the United States and how many legal problems can be recurring," he said. He cited civil rights as one example of a recurring theme or pattern of cases that re-emerges.

PROFESSORS, CLASSMATES MAKE IT MEMORABLE

"I remember these classes," he said, especially courses taught by Professor Ramasastry and Professor Roy Prosterman.

Law classes challenged him academically; he recalled they were "very hard." Initially, he struggled with his English and expressed himself in group settings with some difficulty. However, the professors were "kind and patient with comments and corrections." He praised the faculty for their "passion for educating international students."

A close-knit cadre of international students (many from Asian countries) populated the law school's SID and Intellectual Property Law and Policy programs. They also helped ensure Shio's success at UW. "Talking with them helped me a lot," he said. "They are professionals. Many had rich legal experiences in their own countries."

After graduation from UW School of Law in 2004, he was admitted to the bar in New York.

Collegiality with his SID network of friends and associates continues. "I still have contact with my classmates," he said. Especially since he began traveling extensively to numerous Asian countries on behalf of JICA, Shio has encountered many more alumni from UW School of Law.

"Instantly, we felt intimacy that we are graduates. We are Huskies," Shio said. "That makes my work very easy."

His SID degree laid the foundation for advancement, he said. He benefits from it daily.

What does collaboration look like? To some, the thought of collaboration invokes visions of a busy and noisy group—working together, sharing ideas and tossing documents across tables strewn with coffee cups, pens, pencils, iPads, laptops and notepads. Although the Gallagher Law Library might seem like a hushed place to a cursory visitor, it houses a busy, lively and wonderfully collaborative group. At the heart of the Law Library's primary mission to support the curricular and research needs of UW Law is a dedicated group of librarians and library staff who share resources and expertise with students, staff, faculty and members of the Seattle

The Law Library takes pride in fostering a collaborative environment for UW Law. Looking around the Law Library, collaboration can be found everywhere: in the carefully selected materials waiting to be shelved at the Circulation Desk, in the visitors asking questions at the Reference Office, in the law students working together in the new Student Org Space on L2 and in the researchers using library-sponsored databases at the computer terminals.

Behind the scenes (or the shelves rather), collaboration abounds as well. Collection development librarians maintain close relationships with UW Law faculty to inform Law Library decisions to purchase resources and subscribe to databases. Technical services staff acquire, catalog and prepare print materials for patron use while also preserving the existing collection for future researchers. Technical services staff also focus on building and maintaining electronic tools that help library users locate resources. Circulation and resource sharing staff manage and monitor materials, helping to connect visitors with resources both in the library and in other libraries (via interlibrary loan). Reference librarians consult with UW Law faculty to provide research and reference services that informs their excellent scholarship. Reference librarians also meet with UW Law students both in their classes and one-on-one, to provide individual research instruction for their papers and assignments. The guided instruction provides students with skills to find the best resources efficiently, allowing students more time to write and develop their projects. Working together means improving the quality of the work of UW Law students, faculty, staff and other Law Library visitors.

Collaboration

The collaborative efforts of the Law Library are not confined within its walls; they stretch beyond the state of Washington to reinforce UW Law's national presence. Together with the Ohio State University Moritz College of Law and the University of Pittsburgh School of Law, staff of the Gallagher Law Library coedit the Legal Scholarship Blog (http://legalscholarshipblog. com). The blog facilitates the legal academy's development and dissemination of scholarship by alerting law professors (and aspiring law professors) to upcoming conferences and calls for papers. The blog also informs readers about colloquia and workshops for papers at law schools around the country each day. With over 500 followers on Twitter, the Legal Scholarship Blog represents a valuable resource to legal academics across the country. The Legal Scholarship Blog is just one of countless collaborations that the Law Library contributes to in support of UW Law.

Recently, the Law Library joined its biggest collaborative effort yet. The Law Library along with all the University of Washington Libraries moved to connect with the world's largest shared catalog. Joining 36 other college and university libraries in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho—known as the Orbis Cascade Alliance (http://www.orbiscascade.org), the Law Library's participation in moving to a shared catalog unlocks countless opportunities for collaboration. This collaboration will translate to improved resource sharing and will allow broader access to materials for students, faculty, staff and other library visitors! You can try out the beta version of the new catalog at the Gallagher Law Library website (http://www.lib.law.washington.edu).

The Gallagher Law Library is proud that its collaboration provides useful resources available to all patrons, improves faculty and student scholarship, practical skills development for students and above all, service for the global common good!
