98 NOTES

With the publication of this number, the editorship of the Journal passes formally into the hands of Dr. Gertrude Robinson, who teaches in the communications program at McGill University in Montreal, The Journal is fortunate, indeed, to have Dr. Robinson as its permanent editor for at least the next three years, and those of us who have been involved with the affairs of the Journal during these interim months are truly delighted to see it pass to such competent hands. "G.G." Robinson is both good friend and respected colleague to all of us who teach in this discipline in Canada, and we will watch with interest and pleasure as she guides our Journal to new levels of scholarly maturity.

We understand that the first number of the Journal, under its new editorship, will be in subscribers' hands early in 1988

From now on, all correspondence relating to editorial matters should be directed to Dr. Robinson's attention. Her postal address is provided inside the front cover of this number.

Andrew Osler and Benjamin Singer

* * * * * * * *

Professor Andrew MacFarlane, who chairs the Commonwealth Association for Education in Journalism and Communication, is asking his colleagues across Canada to donate books on communications and related subjects for use in schools and departments in Third World countries. The CAEJC is a non-profit scholarly and professional organization committed to resource sharing among developed and developing countries in the Commonwealth. Colleagues prepared to donate their excess or surplus books to this excellent cause should contact Andrew MacFarlane at the Graduate School of Journalism, University of Western Ontario, London, Ontario N6A 5B7. Andy's phone number is (519) 661–3383.