

CONTRIBUTORS

G.P. Armstrong is the "Soviet Desk" analyst in the Directorate of Strategic Analysis, Operational Research and Analysis Establishment, Department of National Defence, Ottawa. A graduate of Trent University, he received his PhD in War Studies from the University of London. He has published a series of short monographs for DSTRATA on various aspects of Soviet government and politics.

Robert Bruce is senior lecturer in politics at Curtin University of Technology, Perth, Australia, and is also associated with the university's new Centre for Indian Ocean Regional Studies. He received his PhD in international studies from Johns Hopkins University.

Steve Bruce is lecturer in sociology at Queen's University, Belfast, Northern Ireland. He is author of two books on modern Protestantism. He has been working recently on an account of Ian Paisley's Democratic Unionist Party and the Free Presbyterian Church of Ulster.

K.G. Robertson is senior lecturer in sociology and member of the Graduate School of European and International Studies at the University of Reading, England. He is author of Public Secrets (Macmillan 1982) and editor of British and American Perspectives on Intelligence (RUSI/Macmillan 1986). He is currently engaged in a study of internal security in democratic states. This is his second article for the Quarterly.

Sanford Silverburg is professor and Chairman of Political Science at Catawba College, Salisbury, North Carolina. He received his PhD in international relations from American University and has held a number of teaching and research positions. He is author of several books and numerous articles on diplomatic and legal aspects of the Middle East conflict.

Brent L. Smith is Associate Professor of Criminal Justice and Sociology at the University of Alabama, Birmingham. He received his PhD in sociology from Purdue University, and has conducted and published studies on terrorism and victimization.

J. Brent Wilson is a doctoral candidate in history at the University of New Brunswick, where he is studying the British southern campaign in the American revolutionary war. A graduate of Brock University, he received his M.A. in War History from U.N.B. His M.A. thesis, on morale in the British Army during the First World War, is being revised for publication.