Steve Bouma-Prediger '79 named H.O.P.E. Prof

Dr. Steven Bouma-Prediger '79 received the 35th annual "Hope Outstanding Professor Educator" (H.O.P.E.) Award from the Class of '99.

Dr. Bouma-Prediger, an associate professor of religion, was honored during the college's annual Honors Convocation, held in Dimnent Memorial Chapel on Thursday, April 29. The award, first given in 1965, is presented by the graduating class to the professor who they feel epitomizes the best qualities of the Hope College educator.

"Steve Bouma-Prediger has been an outstanding faculty member at Hope—as a teacher, as a scholar and as a person who cares for students," said Dr. John H. Jacobson, president of Hope College. "I am delighted that he has been chosen this year to receive the H.O.P.E. award."

Dr. Bouma-Prediger has been a member of the Hope faculty since 1994. His areas of specialization include the philosophy of religion and philosophical theology, philosophy and theology of nature, ecological ethics and Christian theology.

He has regularly led a Hope "May Term" in the Adirondacks that concerns ecological theology and ethics. He was the college's commencement speaker in May of 1998.

His book The Greening of Theology: The Ecological Models of Rosemary Radford Ruether, Joseph Sittler, and Jurgen Moltmann was published in 1995, and he is co-author of the 1996 monograph Assessing the Ark: A Christian Perspective on Species and the Endangered Species Act, written with Virginia Vroblesky. He is also the author of numerous scholarly articles and reviews.

From 1990 to 1994, Dr. Bouma-Prediger was an assistant professor of philosophy and chair of the department at North Park College in Chicago, Ill. While he was at North Park College, The Chicago Tribune named him to its 1994 "All Professor II" academic team, which recognized 50 outstanding faculty from smaller Chicago-area colleges and universities.

He was a member of the philosophy faculty at North Park Theological Seminary in Chicago from 1992 to 1994, and at Fuller Theological Seminary in 1993.

He holds a master's degree in philosophy from the Institute for Christian Studies of Toronto in Ontario, Canada, a

"Quote, unquote"

Quote, unquote is an eclectic sampling of things said at and about Hope College.

The following column by Amanda Black '99 of Cartersville, Ga., appeared in the April 28 Anchor, the final edition of the 1998-99 school year.

"Students learn a lot in the classroom.

"But most of us students don't plan on spending the rest of our lives in classrooms. Even though many want to be teachers, there are some that will step into a classroom for the last time this week. No more homework, no more papers, no more tests.

"Then the real challenge begins.

"We get to join the ranks of adults. I've put in my application, tried on my cap and gown and signed away the next 20 years to repay my loans to the United States government.

"I'm a little scared, but I have had experiences that mirror the 'real world.' I didn't learn everything that I know in the classroom; I was a student leader. The Milestone, Anchor, WTHS, AIM, Nykerk and FCS have filled my time, but provided an invaluable experience. Somehow, those idle hours seemed filled with things to do. Those hours outside of the classroom became filled with decisions to make, things to get done and having some fun too.

"The mysteries of time management, money dozing, computer repair, working in groups, returning messages, respect, dependability, caring, and leadership became more than concepts. At my internship, they are very concerned about recent college graduates because they are too green. I have made decisions that high-level management makes. I know it is a much smaller scale, but I have been faithful with little. When a lot is given to me, I intend to use the skills that I learned as part of a student organization.

"When I look back at my college experience, that time I spent being a part of student organizations will always come to mind. I cannot separate those experiences from the whole. I won't forget the times that taught me so much.

"(A word of warning: seniors tend to get a little sappy when the calendar turns to April. An episode of that will follow.)

"Those times have made me laugh. For years, I will tell stories about media conferences in Orlando and Chicago. The Milestone staff made an appearance in the audience of the Jenny Jones show. I will never forget that strange time. The people make this job so wonderful. Some of the best friends that I've ever had came from my stint as part of student organizations.

"They've made me cry too. Some late nights when I stayed up struggling to make an Anchor or Milestone deadline have been less than pleasant. Fixing problems, doing work for several editors, ignoring my free time, and being dead broke were not the best times in my life. They taught me lessons though. I am ready to deal with the problems to come.

"For those of you that still have time left at Hope College, make the best of it. You still have the chance to get involved. Don't worry about the difficulties or being under-qualified. You are talented; there is somewhere and someone who knows the opportunities. The lessons to be learned will change who you are. Memories await, as do plenty of good friends. You never know what can happen. Take a chance.

"I did. I will never be the same." ↵

STUDENT KUDOS:

Caroline J. Newell, a senior from Reed City, Mich., has received a prestigious Goldwater Scholarship for the 1999-00 academic year.

The scholarships were awarded by the Board of Trustees of the Goldwater Scholarship and Excellence in Education Foundation to 304 undergraduate sophomores and juniors from the 50 states for the 1999-2000 academic year. The Goldwater Scholars were selected on the basis of academic merit from a field of 1,181 mathematics, science and engineering students who were nominated by the faculties of colleges and universities nationwide.

It is the third year in a row that a Hope student has received one of the scholarships.

Newell is pursuing a double major in biology and chemistry.

Kevin Paulisse '99 of Grandville, Mich., was one of only 96 students nationwide to receive a "National Defense Science and Engineering Graduate Fellowship" for graduate work.

The fellowships pay tuition and fees and a stipend of approximately $19,000 per year for three years for students pursuing doctorates in the sciences.

Paulisse was also one of 900 students nationwide to receive a Graduate Fellowship from the National Science Foundation (NSF), which also supports doctoral studies in the sciences.

He has accepted the National Defense Science and Engineering Graduate Fellowship, since recipients may not choose both. A chemistry and mathematics major, he plans to pursue a doctorate in physical chemistry at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Annalise Van Wyngarden, a senior from Caledonia, Mich., received a fellowship valued in excess of $10,000 to attend the 1999 Summer School in Nuclear and Radiochemistry held at Brookhaven National Laboratory on Long Island, N.Y., from June 21 through July 30.

She is one of just 12 fellowship recipients chosen nationally.

The intensive, six-week school consists of both lecture and laboratory work on the fundamentals of nuclear science and its applications to nuclear medicine and related fields. In addition to the formal instruction, the program will include research site visits, a guest lecture series and the opportunity to meet and interact with prominent research scientists working in nuclear and radiochemistry.

GEOLOGY RESEARCH: The National Science Foundation (NSF) and the Petroleum Research Fund (PRF) have recently funded research and teaching in the department of geological and environmental sciences.

Last summer, the NSF awarded a $27,365 instructional laboratory instrumentation (ILI) grant to faculty members Dr. Brian Bodenbender, Dr. Jonathan Peterson '84 and Dr. Graham Peaslee for the acquisition and development of an environmental science laboratory.

A major component of the project is a Geographic Information System (GIS), and the GIS has already spawned additional research funding. In March, the PRF awarded Dr. Bodenbender a two-year, $25,000 grant to

Hope leads in summer grants

Hope holds more grants for summer student research from the National Science Foundation's "Research Experiences for Undergraduates" (NSF-REU) program than any other liberal arts college in the country.

Hope holds a total of five of the awards for the summer: in biology, chemistry, computer science, mathematics, and physics and engineering. It is the eighth consecutive year that at least four Hope departments have had NSF-REU support.

Nationwide, only six other institutions, all of which are universities, hold as many of the grants as Hope, and only two universities hold more. Other than Hope, the only recipients of three or more of the grants are universities or research institutions.

More than 200 institutions, including not only colleges and universities but also museums and independent research organizations, hold NSF-REU grants this year.

Through Hope's grants, undergraduate students from both Hope and elsewhere are conducting research on a full-time basis with Hope faculty members for eight to 10 weeks this summer, and are receiving stipends as well as support for housing, travel and other expenses. They are on campus with students whose summer research at Hope is supported in other ways.

The department of biology's grant is supporting 10 students working with seven faculty members for 10 weeks. The three-year, $156,000 grant is being administered by Dr. Christopher Barney, Hope holds more summer research grants through the NSF-REU program than any other liberal arts college in the country—and also more than all but a handful of large research institutions. who is professor of biology and chair of the department, and Dr. Virginia McDonough, who is an assistant professor of biology.

The department of chemistry's grant is supporting eight students working among 11 faculty for up to 10 weeks. The three-year, $114,900 grant is being administered by Dr. Stephen Taylor, professor of chemistry, and Dr. William S. Mungall, who is the Elmer E. Hartgerink Professor of Chemistry.

The department of computer science's grant is supporting eight students working with three faculty for 10 weeks. The three-year, $146,700 grant is being administered by Dr. Herbert Dershem, professor of computer science and chair of the department.

The department of mathematics's grant is supporting six students working with two faculty members for eight weeks. The four-year, $120,000 grant is being administered by Dr. Timothy Pennings, associate professor of mathematics and chair of the department.

The department of physics and engineering's grant is supporting eight students working with seven faculty for 10 weeks. The two-year, $90,251 grant is being administered by Dr. Peter Jolivet, professor of physics.

Stats class makes magazine

Getting creative with statistics is usually frowned upon, but this semester mathematics professor John Van Iwaarden '57 encouraged it.

The students in his introductory statistics class were assigned to write a magazine article for a set of data they found interesting. The idea was to make students more aware of how statistics can be used, or mis-used in print, while at the same time adding writing—and a bit of fun—to their numbers-based course.

"We see a lot of statistics appearing in everyday newspapers and magazines," Professor Van Iwaarden said. "We want our students to be able to look more critically at the use of statistics."

"Plus, this was a great opportunity for us to let the students express themselves in ways that they don't normally get to do in a math class," he said. "They're allowed to pick the question that they want to answer. They're allowed to pick the article that they want to write."

The students did their work in groups, with the top four projects combined to form a statistical magazine. The four topics ranged from an analysis of baseball catchers' ability at the plate instead of behind it (freshmen Blair Johnson of St. Joseph, Mich., and Nathaniel Tripp of Hudson, N.Y.); to the value of used automobiles (freshman Lindy Crockett of Battle Creek, Mich., and sophomore Carolyn Kremm of Ann Arbor, Mich.); to average height of choral singers (sophomores Kelly Kiewiet of Kalamazoo, Mich., and Kirsten Slotten of Grand Ledge, Mich.); to use of contraception by age group (senior Steve Brenner of Sturgis, Mich., junior Chris Frentz of Haslett, Mich., and sophomore Amanda Peters of Spring Lake, Mich.).

The reasons for the groups' choices varied. Johnson and Tripp, for example, felt that catchers were the unsung heroes of baseball (their data supported the premise, finding that catchers who played in 80 or more games from 1995 to 1997 averaged .265 at bat).

Crockett and Kremm ran with the genre, generating an entire "magazine" themselves to surround their assigned article, including a full-color cover, and a humorous "classifieds" section. "We had a lot of fun planning it," Kremm said. (Their "extra" articles were used extensively in the larger class magazine as well.)

Complimented by Professor Van Iwaarden for their creativity, the students also gave the assignment itself high marks.

"It made it much more enjoyable," Frentz said. "Doing something like this lets you use all kinds of classes."

Summer Seminars

Five courses are available for one or two hours of undergraduate credit or, in some cases, one graduate credit or on an audit basis. The courses run Monday-Friday, Aug. 2-6, from 9 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. The courses are:

- "Wild Poetry"
- "Dissolving Boundaries: Understanding the Hispanic Way"
- "Mastering the World Wide Web"
- "The Fourth Genre: Creative Nonfiction"
- "Political Dilemmas and Human Rights in Contemporary American Foreign Policy"

For additional information about this year's summer seminars, please call David James '76, program director, at (616) 395-7830.

Admissions

Campus Visits: The Admissions Office is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays, and from 9 a.m. until noon on Saturdays. Tours and admissions interviews are available during the summer as well as the school year. Appointments are recommended.

Visitation Days offer specific programs for prospective students, including transfers and high school juniors and seniors. The programs show students and their parents a typical day in the life of a Hope student. The dates for 1999-00 are as follows:

Class of '99 sails on

Commencement speakers John and Julie Fiedler found numerous ways to highlight their anchor analogy during their address on Sunday, May 9, including visually.

Shortly after beginning their speech, they discarded their black academic robes and continued while clad as sailors. "Since everyone seemed to be dressing up today, we decided 19th century sailor costumes are pretty appropriate outfits for the commencement speech at a college whose symbol is an anchor and whose athletic teams are known as the Flying Dutchmen and the Flying Dutch," said Julie Fiedler, who like John is an adjunct assistant professor of English.

In keeping with the nautical theme, the Fiedlers titled their address "Anchors Aweigh." They presented their "Top 5 Rules for the Flying Dutch of 1999" as the graduates prepared to sail into their lives after Hope.

Approximately 4,000 attended Commencement, held at Holland Municipal Stadium. About 590 Hope seniors participated, including graduates from throughout the United States and as far away as Bulgaria, Kuwait and Peru.

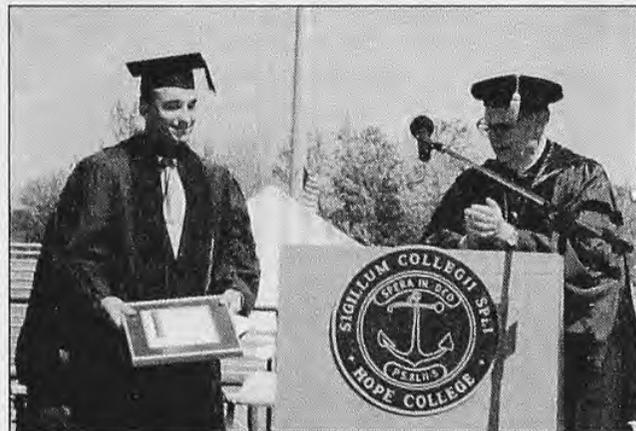

In addition to honoring the graduates during the ceremony, the college also presented a Distinguished Service Award to Professor Jose Alfredo Zepeda Garrido, rector of the Autonomous University of Queretaro. Professor Zepeda played a central role in establishing the on-going exchange program between Hope and the university.

Also as with the graduates, the event marked both an ending and a beginning for the Fiedlers, who are leaving the college after their 13 years on the faculty. John Fiedler plans to pursue a career as an elementary teacher, and Julie Fiedler as an artist.

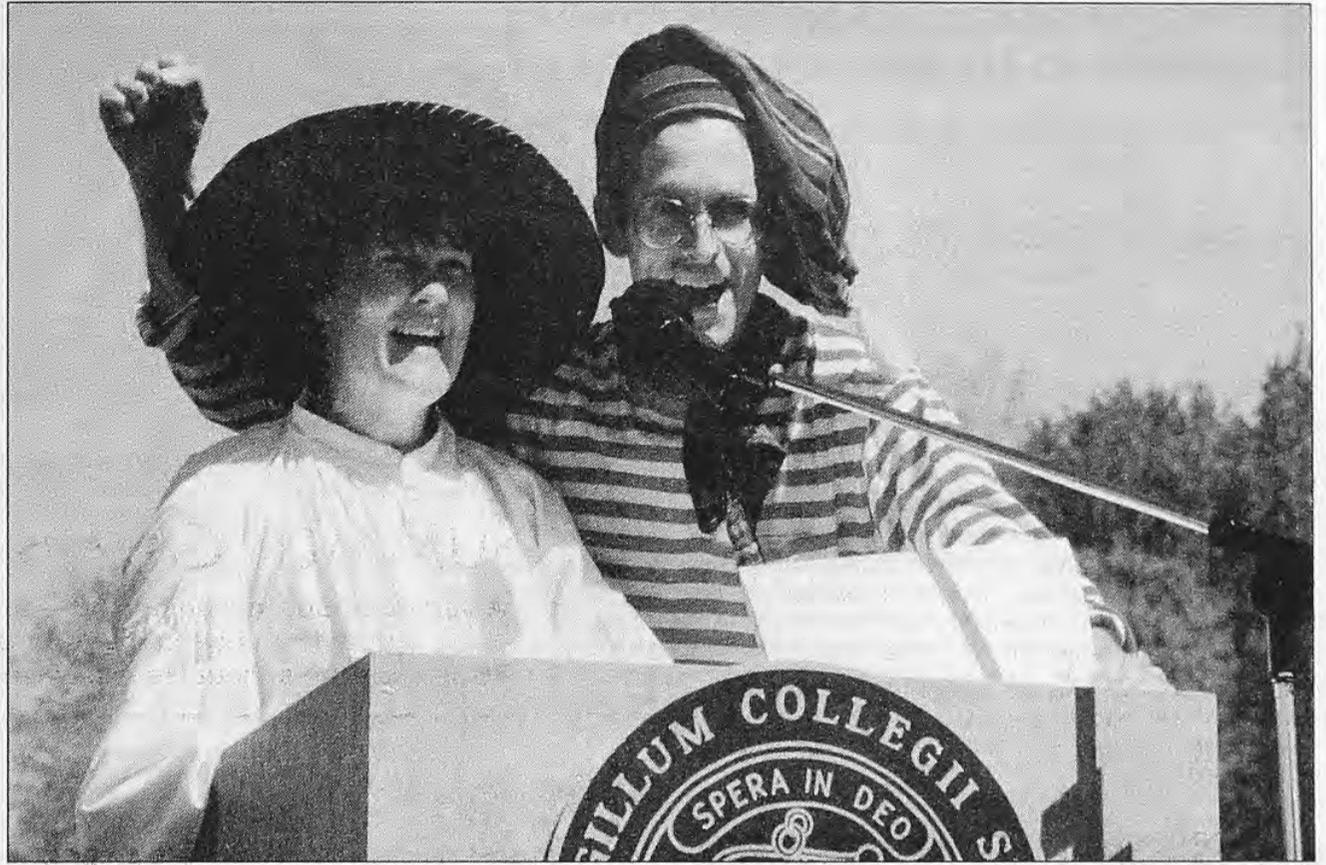

In presenting their five rules, the Fiedlers shared the story of the Flying Dutchman captain of legend, who because of a rash oath was cursed to repeat an unsuccessful journey around the Cape of Good Hope for eternity, bringing bad luck to those who encountered him. Julie Fiedler noted that "We're proposing a better breed of Flying Dutch: people a lot closer to the way you guys already are."

John Fiedler said, "As you cast off, consider these rules and you should have no trouble avoiding a lifetime of beating your head against the same old waves and making those around you miserable."

Their first rule was "Count Your Blessings and Give Yourself Credit." Julie Fiedler noted, "Even if you're feeling very anxious about venturing onto the high seas, you need to recognize how lucky you are, and how Hope celebrated its on-going relationship with the Autonomous University of Queretaro in Mexico by presenting a Distinguished Service Award to Professor Jose Alfredo Zepeda Garrido, who as the university's rector was instrumental in establishing the connection between the two schools.

Commencement speakers John and Julie Fiedler removed their formal academic robes and continued while attired as 19th century sailors to add a visual element to their address, titled "Anchors Aweigh."

much you've accomplished."

The second rule was "Look Before You Leap."

"Before you exit the mother ship, make sure you've planned your next tour of duty," John Fiedler said. "My advice is to seek complex, diverse environments. In other words, choose a ship where you'll meet the whole creation and grow in the process."

"America's becoming more diverse, and you can play an important role in determining whether it becomes a culture of racial and ethnic inclusion or devolves into a society of separation," he said.

The third rule was "Get Ready to Change Course."

"Once you haul anchor, you need to be flexible about your destination," Julie Fiedler said. Together, the Fiedlers encouraged the graduates to "Commit to the kind of continuous learning that will keep you alive, vital, engaged, creative, spiritually attuned, interested and interesting, and connected to your community."

The fourth rule was "Lighten Up, Don't Clam Up."

"Obviously, coping with the kind of change your life will demand will be a lot easier if you have a sense of humor," Julie Fiedler said. "Believe me, if we weren't laughing as we argued about how to write this speech, our marriage would have suffered."

"But without the argument, our speech would have suffered," John Fiedler said. "So don't clam up, speak up. Seek a ship where your voice will be heard."

The final rule was "Love Your Mates."

"As you've seen recently, in locations far and near, hatred is a deadly threat to individuals and whole communities. It destroys lives, and the threat of violence erupting from hatred can destroy the quality of life," Julie Fiedler said. "What I'm about to say will sound incredibly obvious, but it bears repeating: you can love people, even people very different from yourself, and love God at the same time."

"And when you find people who love you in an exceptional way, hold onto those friends for dear life, whether they're a parent or partner or professor or spouse or mentor or minister," she said. "Love can expand your horizons and make your voyage doubly worthwhile. And who knows all the places you'll go when love plays a part?"

Earlier in the day, the Rev. Frederick Kruithof '61 delivered the Baccalaureate sermon, "A Living Dog is Better Than a Dead Lion." The title was based on Ecclesiastes 9:4, "Anyone who is among the living has hope - for a living dog is better than a dead lion!" He subtitled the address "Turn to God, Rejoice in Hope," a phrase inspired by another of the service's scriptural passages, Romans 12:12a. Kruithof is the 1998-99 president of the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America and minister of preaching and congregational care at Second Reformed Church in Kalamazoo.

He considered the anxiety that the graduates might be feeling as their time at Hope ended and the next phase of their lives began. Perhaps, he noted, they were troubled by campus controversy, or uncertainty concerning employment or graduate school, or events like the shootings in Littleton, Colo., or the crisis in Kosovo.

Rev. Kruithof said that despite such troubles, Christians can be optimistic.

"If you are alive, there is reason to be optimistic," he said. "Just because God is God, the Christian is always certain that 'the best is yet to be.'"

"In the English usage, the word 'hope' covers a wide range of meanings, and in fact it is no more widely apparent than in the Bible," he said. "It springs from the very covenant between God and his people."

"The promises are made to Abraham and to his kin. Paul, among others, picks it up when he preaches—in a world of death and despair—to the church at Corinth and says, 'Death, my friends is swallowed up in victory,'" Rev. Kruithof said. He added that Paul "encourages us never to lose heart. Do not lose hope, he reminds the Corinthians."

"There really are no hopeless situations in life; only people who have grown hopeless about them," Rev. Kruithof said. "The universe at times may stare blankly at us but God is still in charge." ✍

Reflections upon era's end

An assortment of observations occasioned by the retirement of President Dr. John H. Jacobson on June 30, 1999, after 12 years at Hope's helm.

"Hope College today is a different place in many ways than the one John Jacobson found when he became the college's 10th president in 1987. Then, as now, it was an institution that provided a high quality liberal-arts education rooted in the beliefs of the Reformed Church in America. However, in the last 12 years Jacobson has overseen significant gains in enrollment, physical facilities and financial security..."

"The success of Hope College is important to the entire Holland community, since Hope is such a great educational and cultural asset. The accomplishments of the last 12 years were the result of the work of hundreds of people, but they also reflect the leadership of its chief executive..."

President Jacobson was Grand Marshal for the culminating "Muziekparade" (Parade of Bands) during Tulip Time on Saturday, May 15. He and Jeanne rode with granddaughters Miranda Huang, Jacqueline Jacobson, Sarah Jacobson and Grace Huang.

On Saturday, May 8, the Alumni Association presented the Jacobsons with a photo of the icicle-adorned President's Home as a remembrance of Holland winters while they enjoy their new retirement home in Sarasota, Fla.

"The Hope family has certainly grown during the 12 years that you have served as our president. When you arrived on campus in 1987, the Hope alumni family numbered 22,537. Tomorrow afternoon when you award the Bachelor of Science in Nursing Degree to Kelly Teresa Zweering—alphabetically the last of 592 members of the Class of 1999—your Hope family will have grown to 27,537..."

"One of my early impressions during my first introduction to John and Jeanne in January 1987 was that their love for each other was transparent, that their lives were rooted in faith in God, and that their excitement at coming to Hope College was genuine. That impression was often reinforced in succeeding years..."

"Jeanne, I will miss your warm and friendly welcome, your infectious laugh, your quick wit, your generous spirit, your gracious manner, and your enthusiasm for learning and for Hope College..."

"Although you could have had a distinguished career as a philosopher, John, you opted to spend your career in applied philosophy—higher education administration—an act that Plato would have applauded. ## "Emerging tech" transforms learning

A spider web is a great place if it's home, less so if not.

In the former case, it expands one's reach, is traveled quickly and smoothly, and is indeed essential to life. In the latter, it's at best an inconvenience and at worst a snare that can't be escaped.

Where higher education is concerned, the same seems to hold true for the cyber Web. However, while residency is clearly defined in the animal world, colleges and universities nationwide are still reasoning through the role of the World Wide Web and other break-through technologies.

At Hope, instructors across the board have been quick to find creative ways to use emerging technologies to enhance learning.

At Hope, instructors across the board have been quick to find creative ways to use emerging technologies to enhance learning. In May, Hope offered its first on-line course. The Discus Web discussion board developed at the college is being used worldwide. A tutorial CD-ROM lets students learn about using the library at their own pace. The Distance Learning Classroom cuts down on travel time for students in the Hope-Calvin Nursing Program. The department of computer science is considering new applications for hand-held computers. The list goes on.

Computer use on-campus has exploded. "We estimate that 65 percent of students own a computer," notes Carl Heideman '88, director of computing and information technology, and the college has some 350 computers available to students in laboratories.

A total of 700 students have hooked their own computers into the campus computer network (every residence hall room has a "port" for each resident); and another 500-600 students use modems.

The Hope home page (www.hope.edu) receives 1,300 hits daily, from users around the world. An "announcements" page dedicated to on-campus users averages more than 3,400 hits daily during the school year.

At the same time as options and interest grow, however, the college is working to insure that in adopting the best of the new, it doesn't lose the best of the old.

"The risk is assuming that technology is the answer to every question," said Dr. Jacob E. Nyenhuis, provost and professor of classics. "Technology has tremendous possibilities, but it has limitations, and we need to approach it like every development, with both a recognition of its promise and a realization that there are inevitable pitfalls."

Some analysts, like Dr. Robert Zemsky, even project that the college/university of today will be obsolete within 30 years. One extreme model foresees students nationwide learning from the televised lectures of a few "star" or "big-name" professors. Another suggests that learning will go on-line, with self-directed students moving through pre-packaged courses with no faculty direction.

Dr. Nyenhuis doesn't feel that residential liberal arts colleges like Hope are doomed.

"I am not worried that Hope will no longer have a reason to exist in 30 years," he said. "There are certain skills and habits of the mind and of the heart that cannot be developed just by the use of the computer, and so I think there will be a continuing need for institutions like Hope."

"Emerging technology" is finding its way into learning in many ways. Students in Dr. Thomas Ludwig's Web-based May Term in developmental psychology reviewed on-line modules in place of the usual lecture, and conversed via the Discus discussion board (see story on page eight) instead of talking in class. Whether or not he ever teaches another course entirely over the World Wide Web, Dr. Ludwig plans to blend some of his approaches into his other classes as well.

"But what I think we need to continue to do is to evaluate the opportunities provided by the emerging technologies while also assessing what distinctive contributions we can make," Dr. Nyenhuis said.

Dr. Thomas Ludwig, professor of psychology, has made a career of exploring ways to use the computer as an educational tool. He has won national awards for his psychology software, ranging from "Best Psychology Software" for PsychSim II in the 1990 EDUCOM/NCRIPAL Higher Education Software Awards competition, to the 1997 Silver World Medal in the College Division of the New York Festivals' "International Interactive Multimedia Awards" for PsychQuest.

His Web-based May Term in developmental psychology was a carefully constructed experiment to see how far the Hope way of teaching and on-line technology can travel together. Where things go in the long run remains to be seen, but in any case Dr. Ludwig feels that Hope can't afford not to explore the questions.

"I'm not a defender of Web-based learning. I don't think we should sell off our classroom buildings and put all our faculty to work developing Web materials," he said. "But we need to be clear about what's better about classroom-based learning and why we're using it and why we're promoting it."

(See page eight.)

Web course a Hope first

Dr. Thomas Ludwig's Web-based May Term course in developmental psychology brought the time-tested Hope College touch to a new learning environment.

Dr. Ludwig has taught developmental psychology at Hope for 22 years, and he has a long-standing interest in using computers as instructional aids. With so many in higher education proclaiming the Web's potential in teaching, he decided to blend the two together.

He didn't experiment at his students' expense, however. The dozen who took the class, from as far away as New Jersey and as nearby as Holland, encountered a Web course very carefully crafted to resemble the original.

"There are many possible models for distance learning," Dr. Ludwig said. "We wanted to experiment with a model that simulated as closely as possible the way I would teach developmental psychology on-campus during May Term."

Just as always, the students were responsible for reading the course's textbook. Instead of attending lectures by Dr. Ludwig, however, they went on-line to work through "lecture modules" that complemented the textbook.

Experience has shown that it's difficult to take long tests on-line, so Dr. Ludwig developed shorter quizzes (20 questions) for each of the book's 26 chapters. He also prepared quizzes on the modules themselves—in effect, quizzing the students immediately after each "lecture."

In addition to being available through e-mail, Dr. Ludwig maintained office hours during which he was available by telephone. Rebecca Van Dyke '96, who is a project coordinator in Computing and Information Technology at Hope and worked with Dr. Ludwig to develop the on-line package, stayed available for technical support as well, and served as the discussion facilitator.

Dr. Ludwig and the class participated in a "chat room" using the Discus program, with the students further divided into three groups, each with its own "chat room." Working on-line, each group developed "position papers" on controversial issues in developmental psychology like child care, which they then presented for the entire class to consider and discuss.

"I think that this course has been a very effective way for me to learn because it gets me more involved and is more interesting than just sitting through a three-hour lecture every day," said sophomore Christina Miller of Holland, who noted that she'd take another Web-based course next year if given the chance.

Just as the students were open to trying the experimental course, Dr. Ludwig is open to the different directions his May Term experience may take him. "Whether or not I ever teach another on-line course, I believe that the experience that I gained in this approach and the materials I developed will improve my teaching," he said.

For example, the module quizzes follow what he notes is a truism in education: that students learn best if they test themselves as a review of the material they're studying. He hopes to apply the concept in other venues as well.

"I have never, in all my years of teaching, given a test at the end of each of my lectures to see what students learned from the lecture," he said. "For the first time in my entire teaching career, I've been able to work up a mechanism whereby students can review one concept and then test themselves on it, with immediate feedback both to the students and to me."

Transforming technology

"There is just a tidal wave of excitement and enthusiasm about Web-based learning in higher education, driven mostly by large universities," Dr. Ludwig said. "And I think there are some significant flaws in the models of education that are being proposed. But unless we experiment with these techniques, we have no credibility if we try to modify or oppose those models."

Dr. Barry Bandstra, like Dr. Ludwig, has long explored the computer's utility as a teaching tool, and also like Dr. Ludwig is interested in finding models that work. An associate professor of religion, he has recently completed a CD-ROM that complements his textbook Reading the Old Testament, putting learning power into the hands of his students that would have been impossible even half a decade ago.

In addition to including the entire text of his book and the Bible, photographs and other information, for example, the CD-ROM contains seamless links to related materials on Web sites of places like the Louvre and the Israel Museum. Students studying, say, the biblical text concerning Abraham's willingness to sacrifice Isaac can see—with just a mouse click—how artists through the centuries have interpreted the event.

"You can really build a network of knowledge that's not possible in a single printed volume," Dr. Bandstra said. "That's just magic to me. It's amazing that we can do that."

Instructional modules and self-quizzes help the students cover material on which he might otherwise have lectured, freeing up class time for analysis and discussion. "That's a major change for me, and that's been exciting," he said. "I feel we can get at more interesting questions by assuming the students have learned the basics."

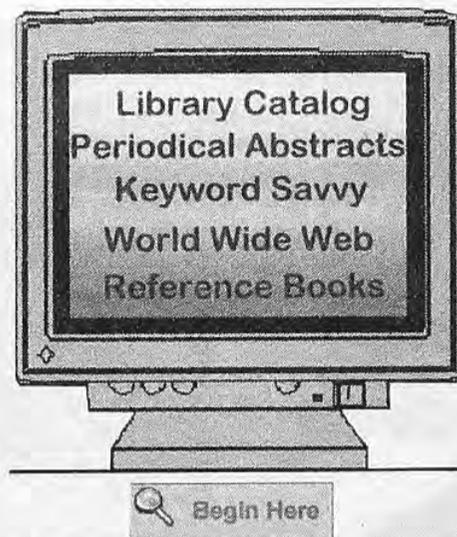

Dr. Lee Forester, associate professor of German, is another faculty member seeking to engage the computer's potential to his students' advantage. He is the developer and lead coordinator of Germany: Live!, a collaborative effort to develop computer-based, multi-media teaching materials for first-year college German courses.

Dr. Forester believes that students learn a language more effectively when they not only study the words and rules of grammar involved, but also experience the language's cultural context. He hopes to exploit the computer's ability to blend audio, visuals and the written word, to give students the next best thing to being there.

"Multi-media has tremendous potential to deliver experiential learning because it engages more of the senses, but it hasn't been fully exploited yet because people are thinking in terms of other media," he said.

"I want to hit every part of the brain that I can," he said. "Because you learn better when you engage in multiple modalities."

This past year, the Van Wylen Library also introduced a CD-ROM designed as a learning resource. Created by Kelly Jacobsma, librarian with the rank of associate professor and head of public services, the interactive package shows students how to use the library to conduct research, culminating with a scenario-based quiz designed to test their newly-learned abilities.

An interactive CD-ROM developed by Professor Kelly Jacobsma of the Van Wylen Library gives freshmen an in-depth, self-paced overview of the library's resources and how to use them.

Freshmen are assigned to use the CD-ROM as part of the First-Year Seminar program, in which all enroll (nearly 700 did the tutorial last fall). "It seemed like a perfect opportunity to get all students involved in what we call 'research education' very early in their career at Hope," Professor Jacobsma said.

Professor Jacobsma used a sabbatical to teach herself how to create such a CD-ROM and to do most of the work on it. The package is being refined for the coming year, both in response to student input and because the rapid changes in library technology mean that its content needs to be updated.

In addition to creating their own packages for emerging technologies, departments are finding new ways to use existing ones. The department of theatre, for example, routinely uses the computer in its set and lighting design. Similarly, Professor Judy Hillman's design students in the department of art use the computer in their work, as do Professor Steve Nelson's students in photography.

"I use PhotoShop for about half the curriculum," Professor Nelson said. "I integrate it with historic processes, so that there's a combined use of electronic imaging and darkroom work. The students do everything from dealing with metamorphosis to collages."

Not all emerging technologies involve the computer. The Web carries with it the potential of "distance learning," which can also take place through the magic of television. Hope's distance learning classroom, now in its second full year, saves travel time for those in the Hope-Calvin nursing program. Rather than make a 90-minute round-trip for those courses which are lecture-based, the students on each campus and their professor can see each other via live telecast.

The time factor is particularly an advantage with 8 a.m. classes, according to senior Lynae Nagelkirk of Zeeland, Mich., although she noted that the reduced face-to-face contact is a trade-off. "It's not as personal as the prof being in your room all the time," she said.

During his time in the program, junior Wario Hussein of Garsen, Kenya, appreciated the way that "add-ons" like PowerPoint-enhanced presentations, as well as the "repeat" potential. "They can record the class for you if you're absent," he said.

Debra Sietsema, assistant professor of nursing, has also appreciated such options. A camera that looks directly down, for example, gives students a useful bird's-eye view for some demonstrations.

As for interaction, the process is on-going.

"Both the use of the technology and the teaching methods are becoming more natural," Professor Sietsema said. "We continue to strive to use as many interactive strategies as possible."

The emerging technologies provide new challenges for everyone, but perhaps none are as affected as those in computer science.

"We know that the tools that we teach students today are going to be obsolete by the time they graduate," said Dr. Herbert Dershem, professor of computer science and chair of the department.

Consequently, he said, while the department does emphasize technical aptitude, it places equal importance on problem-solving, so that students will be equipped to adapt to the new technology that they will inevitably encounter.

Ironically, he remembers, when Hope's department started in 1974 some felt that every computer program needed would have been written within five years. Little did they realize that computers would keep changing, leading to new needs...

While he admits that when he joined the faculty 30 years ago he wouldn't have predicted the World Wide Web with any accuracy, he does feel that the way computers have evolved fits a typical pattern. Often, he said, a new technology is built to mimic something else; becomes refined with time; and then grows beyond itself.

Computers in education, he said, have reached that third stage. They've advanced beyond serving as calculators. They've advanced beyond serving as word processors, automated textbooks or flashcard simulators.

And where might things go tomorrow? Dr. Michael Jipping of the computer science faculty is exploring the educational uses to which hand-held computers like "Palm Pilot" might be put. Compact enough to fit in a pocket, able to carry schedules or pick up e-mail, they only lack, Dr. Dershem feels, a "killer application" to catch the broader imagination.

It's an application that could just come from Hope College, where the desire to find new ways to help students learn might well help lead education in a direction it doesn't yet know it needs to go. ↘

A better mousetrap

One challenge facing those who want to have discussions on the Web is how to do so.

The Discus program developed during the past two years by Dr. William F. Polik of the chemistry faculty and Kevin W. Paulisse '99 of Grandville, Mich., provides an option. It does it so well that it has now been installed at more than 5,000 sites worldwide, in not only English but a dozen other languages.

Dr. Polik, an associate professor of chemistry, and Paulisse conducted research together at Hope. They identified the need for a good "discussion board" program for chemistry, and ultimately took action and created one themselves.

"It started out as the discussion board for the chemistry class that I was in," Paulisse said. "Then we discovered that it has a lot of uses outside of chemistry."

Discus is available on-line for free. In addition to being used in chemistry and many other classes at Hope, it is used by off-campus locales as varied as a Val Kilmer fan club, a group interested in baby names, an airline pilots' association and a site for people who have lost relatives to death.

It is among the top-rated scripts among nearly 2,000 scripts at the CGI Resource Index, and is featured in the May, 1999, issue of the Journal of Chemical Education.

Dr. Polik and Paulisse have even formed their own company to market a commercial version that has additional productivity and security features, although they continue to support and endorse the free version.

"The first thing we recommend is, 'Don't even think about buying it until you've tried the free one,'" Dr. Polik noted. "Ninety percent of Discus sites use the free version. The commercial upgrade is for people or companies who require features beyond those in the free version."

Paulisse added, "In the spirit of the Internet, we fully support inquiries from users of either version." ↘

The Discus discussion board developed for use at Hope by Kevin Paulisse '99 and Dr. William F. Polik of the chemistry faculty has proven popular well beyond campus. The program has been installed at more than 5,000 sites worldwide.

develop a GIS database of fossil localities in Michigan. Dr. Bodenbender's research will help piece together the paleontological record of Middle Devonian rocks in the Michigan Basin, dating from 390 to 370 million years ago.

Ground water research is also active in the department. This semester, Dr. Peterson received a two-year grant from the NSF program for academic liaisons with industry, known as GOALI. The $132,000 grant will be shared with a collaborator at the University of Michigan-Dearborn, and is funded by the NSF (55 percent) and by an environmental consulting firm (45 percent).

The research will make correlations between ground water remediation experiments performed by Dr. Peterson and his students at Hope, computer modeling performed at U of M, and petroleum-contaminated field sites in the greater metropolitan Detroit area. The goal of the research is to develop a model that will predict the cleanup efficiency for a subsurface remediation technique known as "air sparging."

COACH HONORED: James DeHorn '70, who joined Hope's coaching staff as defensive line coach this past fall, was one of 21 high school football coaches inducted into the Michigan High School Football Coaches Association's Hall of Fame on April 17, 1999.

He coached football at Allendale (Mich.) High School from 1970 to 1997, and continues to teach at the school.

His junior varsity and varsity teams amassed an overall record of 137 wins, 85 losses and five ties, with varsity totalling 90 wins, 55 losses and two ties. His teams won seven consecutive Big Sky League championships.

DeHorn had 11 first-team all-state players; two academic all-state players; and four players in the state All-Star Game. He was the All-Star Game's West coordinator for six years, and coached the West All-Stars in 1996.

FACULTY KUDOS:

Curtis Gruenler of the English faculty has been awarded a Mellon Fellowship for study at the Huntington Library in San Marino, Calif., this summer.

Dr. Gruenler is using the library for further research on his current book project, Piers Plowman and the Uses of Enigma.

Written in the later 1300s, Piers Plowman is a book-length series of allegorical dream visions that focuses on how to save one's soul but involves an encyclopedic critique of medieval English culture.

In his study, Dr. Gruenler interprets the series in light of the medieval interest in "enigma," from riddles to the theology implicit in St. Paul's saying that "We see now through a glass darkly, but then face to face" (I Cor. 13:12).

Stephen I. Hemenway of the English faculty has received an award for "Innovative Excellence in Teaching, Learning, and Technology."

He was one of 64 educators from around the world to be honored. The awards were presented during the "Tenth International Conference on College Teaching and Learning," held on Wednesday-Saturday, April 14-17, at Florida Community College at Jacksonville.

Prof enjoys major-league serendipity

Sabbaticals provide a time for faculty to investigate and write about an area of interest.

As he'd hoped, Dr. Roger Nemeth of the sociology faculty did learn some interesting lessons during his recent sabbatical. They just weren't all the ones he'd intended.

On Monday, May 3, Dr. Nemeth watched the Baltimore Orioles host the Cuban national team. The game was to be a simple diversion, happening in the middle of his on-going research on demographic changes in the Reformed Church in America, and immediately after he completed the grueling 100K walk between Washington, D.C., and Harpers Ferry, W.Va. Dr. Nemeth also has a scholarly interest in Cuba's social and economic development, and visited the country in 1993.

The game, however, gave him a ring-side view of how sports and politics can intersect, providing insights that will be weaved into discussions back on campus in the course he teaches on the sociology of sports.

"It reinforced my view that you can't separate politics from sports," he said. "Sports are a reflection of society, just as politics are a reflection of society, and the one will mirror the other."

As the May evening progressed, crowds of protesters and counter-protesters demonstrated outside, fans stormed the field inside and the Cubans eventually basked in a 12-6 win.

"Sports are emotional," he said. "It's emotional for the players; it's also emotional for the fans."

As an award recipient, Dr. Hemenway made a presentation on creativity in the classroom. His title played on the Y2K abbreviation, "Why Two K Concepts May Spark New Millennium Teaching," and he likened instructors and institutions to kaleidoscopes: imaginative and fostering of wonder.

He explored ways that instructors and institutions can work together to engage and educate students effectively. He discussed approaches that he uses, such as "nonpaper" projects and interactive learning, and faculty support that Hope provides, such as teaching workshops and faculty mentoring programs.

Jacob E. Nyenhuis, provost and professor of classics, has been named an honorary member by the college's Alcor Chapter of the Mortar Board honor society.

He was honored on Sunday, April 11, during an induction ceremony for the 40 students who will be members of the chapter during the 1999-00 school year. "Our chapter desired to recognize Provost Nyenhuis for his contributions to Mortar Board, Hope College and the community," said Lori Guse '99 of Cassopolis, Mich., pres-

The Baltimore-Cuba game became a magnet for demonstrators—an apt example, in Dr. Roger Nemeth's view, of how sports and politics intertwine.

The protesters—many of whom, he found, had traveled from Miami for the occasion—brandished signs like "Freedom, Not Games for Cuba." Counter-demonstrators, in turn, argued that such games could be a first step in effecting change toward closer relations between the two countries.

One of his favorite memories is of a sign-wielding protester standing incongruously beneath a statue of famous Baltimore son Babe Ruth. "The Babe was about as apolitical as you can get," Dr. Nemeth laughed.

The Cuban team was out to avenge an 11-inning, 3-2 loss to Baltimore in Havana in March. The game in March had marked the first time a U.S. team traveled to Cuba in 40 years.

The Orioles were missing some players, but Dr. Nemeth gives the Cubans credit for fielding a strong team—one filled with players who he feels could easily thrive in the majors.

He found that the Cubans seemed to appreciate the revelation, too. With the smaller nation still shunned by the U.S. because of the two countries' political differences, the win produced some bragging rights.

"Baseball is synonymous with nationalism in Cuba," he said. "They took major pride in beating a major league baseball team. For the Cubans, this was just like the way that the United States beating the Russian hockey team in the 1980 Olympics was meaningful beyond one hockey team beating another hockey team."

ident of the Alcor Chapter. "Our chapter cannot imagine a person more qualified to receive this honor."

Honorary membership is reserved for individuals who have made a notable contribution over a period of years and whose influence has extended beyond a chapter's college or university. Recipients should also be an advocate of the three ideals of Mortar Board: scholarship, leadership and service.

Claudia Polini, assistant professor of mathematics, has received a grant from the National Science Foundation (NSF) in support of her research.

Her research is on the boundary between commutative algebra and algebraic geometry. Both fields arose from the classical problem of studying mathematical objects defined in the plane by the simplest of equations, namely polynomials. Today, the fields use methods not only from algebra, but also from analysis and topology, and conversely are extensively used in those fields, as well as in fields as diverse as physics, theoretical computer science, cryptography, coding theory and robotics.

Dr. Polini received the full, $59,112, three-year grant that she had sought. According to the NSF, the foundation funds fewer than 20 percent of the research grant proposals it receives, and of those that are accepted only 10 percent receive funding for the entire requested three-year duration.

John T. Quinn, assistant professor of classics, has been selected to participate in a Summer Seminar funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities held at Columbia University in New York City.

The seminar, "Society and Culture in Roman Egypt," will run through July under the leadership of Professor Roger Bagnall of Columbia. The seminar's participants, numbering about a dozen, are college teachers of ancient history, ancient languages, the New Testament and Egyptology.

The seminar will explore life in Egypt under the Roman Empire, from 31 BC to the end of the fifth century AD. Archaeology and literature will provide some of the materials for study, but most of the attention will center on papyrology, the study of ancient writing on paper made from papyrus.

DUTCHMEN HAVE SUCCESSFUL MEN'S TENNIS CAMPAIGN

Two of the three individual honors awarded in MIAA men's tennis went to Hope athletes as the Flying Dutchmen finished second in the conference standings. Coach Steve Gorno's Dutchmen posted a 15-3 dual match record, tying a Hope single season record for victories.

Junior Erik Berg of Lansing, Mich., was presented the MIAA's Stowe Sportsmanship Award, while senior Robert Brandt of Holland, Mich., received the Lawrence Green Scholarship. It marked the third time in four years that a Hope player was presented the sportsmanship award. It was the second consecutive year that a Hope player has received the academic award, which honors the memory of Lawrence "Doc" Green, longtime Hope athletic trainer and coach.

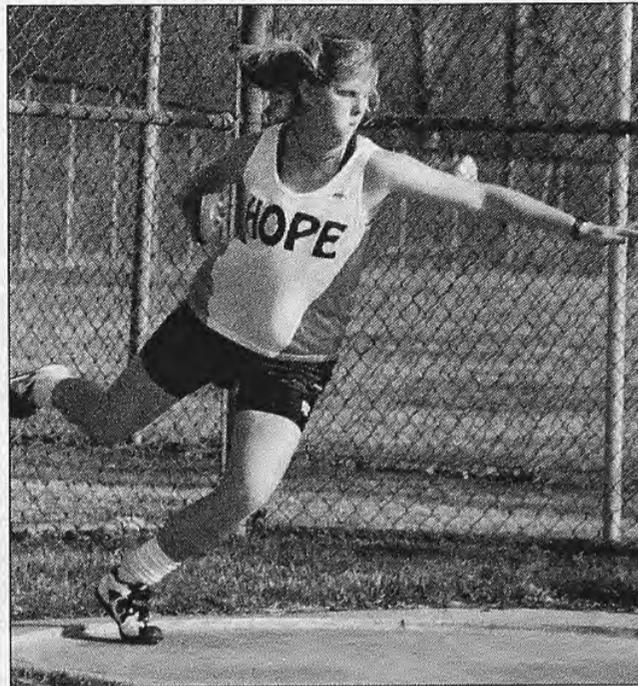

Junior Paul Lillie of Roseville, Minn., was voted to the All-MIAA first team for the second year in-a-row, while teammates Chad Bolinger, a junior from Petoskey, Mich., and Kai Bouchard, a sophomore from Holland, Mich., were named to the second team.

SOFTBALL TEAM POSTS ANOTHER 20-WIN SEASON

For the sixth consecutive year, the Flying Dutch softball team posted a benchmark 20-win season. Coach Karla Wolters' Dutch finished second in the MIAA standings and ended with a 21-13 record.

The season was also a dream-come-true for sophomore catcher Carrie Scott of Centreville, Mich. A year ago the future of her softball playing days was in doubt. Early in the 1998 season Scott suffered a knee injury that abbreviated her freshman year and put into jeopardy her playing future. On opening day of the 1999 season she was back behind the plate for the Flying Dutch.

Scott started in all 34 of the team's games and, amazingly, she put together a 24-game hitting streak to begin the season. Before she was injured in 1998, she had a five-game hitting streak. The combined 29-game hitting streak became the fourth longest in NCAA Division III softball history.

Sophomore Emily Sowers achieved All-America status in her second trip to nationals in the discus.

Scott was rewarded by being named an NCAA softball All-American. She became the eighth Hope softball player to achieve All-America distinction and the third catcher to be honored.

She batted a school-record .448 during the season. Her school-record 47 hits included six doubles, two triples and four home runs. She did not commit a fielding error in 186 chances.

Six Flying Dutch players earned All-MIAA honors. Voted to the first team were sophomore pitcher Kim Grotenhuis of Hamilton, Mich., senior outfielder Christa Murphy of Midland, Mich., and Scott. Voted to the second team were junior outfielder Angie Ciesielski of Linden, Mich., and senior pitcher Lisa Larzelere of Omaha, Neb.

Larzelere set a Hope career record for pitching victories (53-28). Grotenhuis was voted a GTE Academic All-District honoree. A social studies major with a perfect 4.0 grade point average, Grotenhuis posted an 11-6 record this spring.

GOLFERS EXCEL AT NCAA CHAMPIONSHIPS

College golf is typically a fall sport. Last fall, two Hope golfers, sophomore Ellen Colenbrander of Holland, Mich., and freshman Eric Wohlfield of Brighton, Mich., excelled on the course as they won MIAA medalist honors. They were rewarded this spring by gaining berths in the NCAA Division championships and each finished 19th in their respective competition.

Competing at nationals for the third consecutive year, Colenbrander was fifth among the 14 individual golfers who competed in the women's Division II/III championships.

Wohlfield had the best score among the five individual golfers in the men's Division III championships and the second best score among all the freshman golfers in the 163-golfer field.

OUTSTANDING SENIOR SCHOLAR-ATHLETES NAMED

Honored as the outstanding senior athletes in the Class of 1999 were Becky Timmer of Pella, Iowa, and Adam Paarlberg of Alto, Mich.

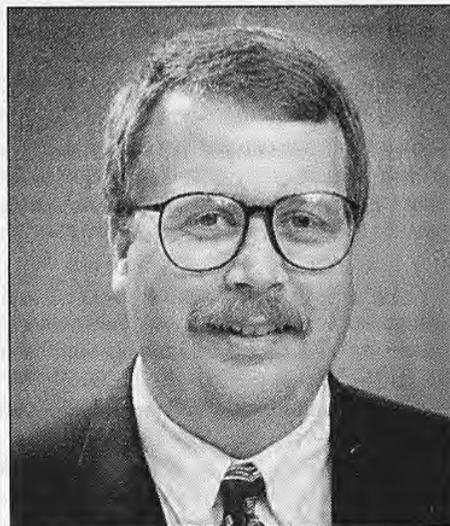

Timmer was presented the John Schouten Award, while Paarlberg was the recipient of the Otto van der Velde All-Campus Award.

A chemistry and Spanish major, Timmer was a standout cross country and track athlete. She was a two-time NCAA Division III All-American in cross country. A business administration major, Paarlberg was an all-MIAA football linebacker. Both were inducted into the college's chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, the highest academic honor Hope can bestow upon its graduates.

Rich Ray named to Hall of Fame

Dr. R. Richard Ray Jr., who is coordinator of the athletic training program and an associate professor of kinesiology, was inducted into the Hall of Fame of the Michigan Athletic Trainers' Society on Thursday, May 27.

Dr. Ray has been a member of the Hope faculty since 1982, and has been involved in the profession of athletic training for more than 20 years. Long-time colleague Dr. George Kraft called the honor "well-deserved," praising Dr. Ray for his leadership role in developing Hope's athletic training program; for skills ranging from his work with athletes to his scholarship; and for the national reputation he has developed in the field of athletic training.

Dr. R. Richard Ray Jr.

"We're lucky to have him," said Dr. Kraft, who is a professor of kinesiology and chair of the department.

"He does all facets of his job with incredible professionalism," Kraft said. "He's a faculty member of whom we can be justifiably proud."

Under Dr. Ray's leadership, the college's athletic training program has grown into a full major that requires its graduates to complete 48 credit hours in a variety of disciplines and at least 1,500 hours of clinical work under the supervision of a certified athletic trainer. Hope is the only private liberal arts college, and also only the fourth institution of any type, in the state of Michigan to have its athletic training program accredited by the Commission on Accreditation of Allied Health Education Programs (CAAHEP).

Dr. Ray has a wide range of research interests, and has received several grants to support his work. He is the editor or author of the books Counseling in Sports Medicine (1999), Management Strategies in Athletic Training (1994) and Case Studies in Athletic Training Administration (1995), all published by Human Kinetics. He has written more than 40 articles in scientific publications, and has presented papers at several professional conferences.

He is editor of Athletic Therapy Today, and he has served as associate editor of the Journal of Athletic Training.

Dr. Ray has served in elected and appointed positions at the state, regional and national levels in various athletic training professional organizations. His activities include having served as president of both the Great Lakes Athletic Trainers Association and the Michigan Athletic Trainers Society. In 1995, the society presented him with its Distinguished Athletic Trainer Award.

Dr. Ray received a master of arts degree in physical education from Western Michigan University in 1980 and a doctorate in educational leadership from Western Michigan University in 1990, and was honored as a Graduate Research and Creative Scholar by the school in 1990. He holds his bachelor's degree from the University of Michigan.

History remembered

Brian Williams '88 is helping others make history.

He's doing it as part of a team of specialists from the University of Michigan spending time in South Africa organizing the archival materials of the decades-long liberation movement. In helping preserve the country's past, they're providing a resource for those wishing to remember and understand it in the future.

Williams is an associate archivist with the Bentley Historical Library at the University of Michigan. He and others from the university began working with archivists at the University of Fort Hare in Alice, South Africa, last year, beginning in March of 1998 and continuing in May and June of that year and again this year. Their mission: to bring order to an eclectic jumble of materials gathered from around the world, to create finding aids to facilitate public access, and to equip Fort Hare's staff to manage the collection in the future.

The Michigan group helps fill a void, according to Williams, who noted that South Africa has no established archival training program. As a result, the process, when it began a year ago, was as new as the archives itself.

"The project was to be more than just a group from Michigan processing these records," he said. "We were also attempting to give staff and students at Fort Hare the capacity to sustain these efforts and further develop the archives. Through formal and informal presentations we outlined archival principles and procedures and explained what we were doing."

The initial training included introducing members of the staff to the Internet and the wealth of material available through the World Wide Web. For the most part, the instruction focused on professionally-useful matters (the archives even has its own Web site now), but the Web's other possibilities didn't escape notice.

"I fear I may have set them back several years when they got an inkling of some of the less essential things available on the Web," Williams said. "One Web site that was of particular interest to them was The Bold and the Beautiful. The soap opera was surprisingly popular in South Africa."

The archives holds the records of the political parties and organizations involved in the overthrow of apartheid, including the Pan-African Congress of Azania (PAC), the Azanian Peoples' Organisation (AZAPO), the Black Consciousness Movement (BCM), the New Unity Movement (NUM) of South Africa and the African National Congress (ANC). The materials include personal letters to and from leaders like South African President Nelson Mandela; newsletters and videotapes; even letters from Paul Simon about a possible concert in South Africa.

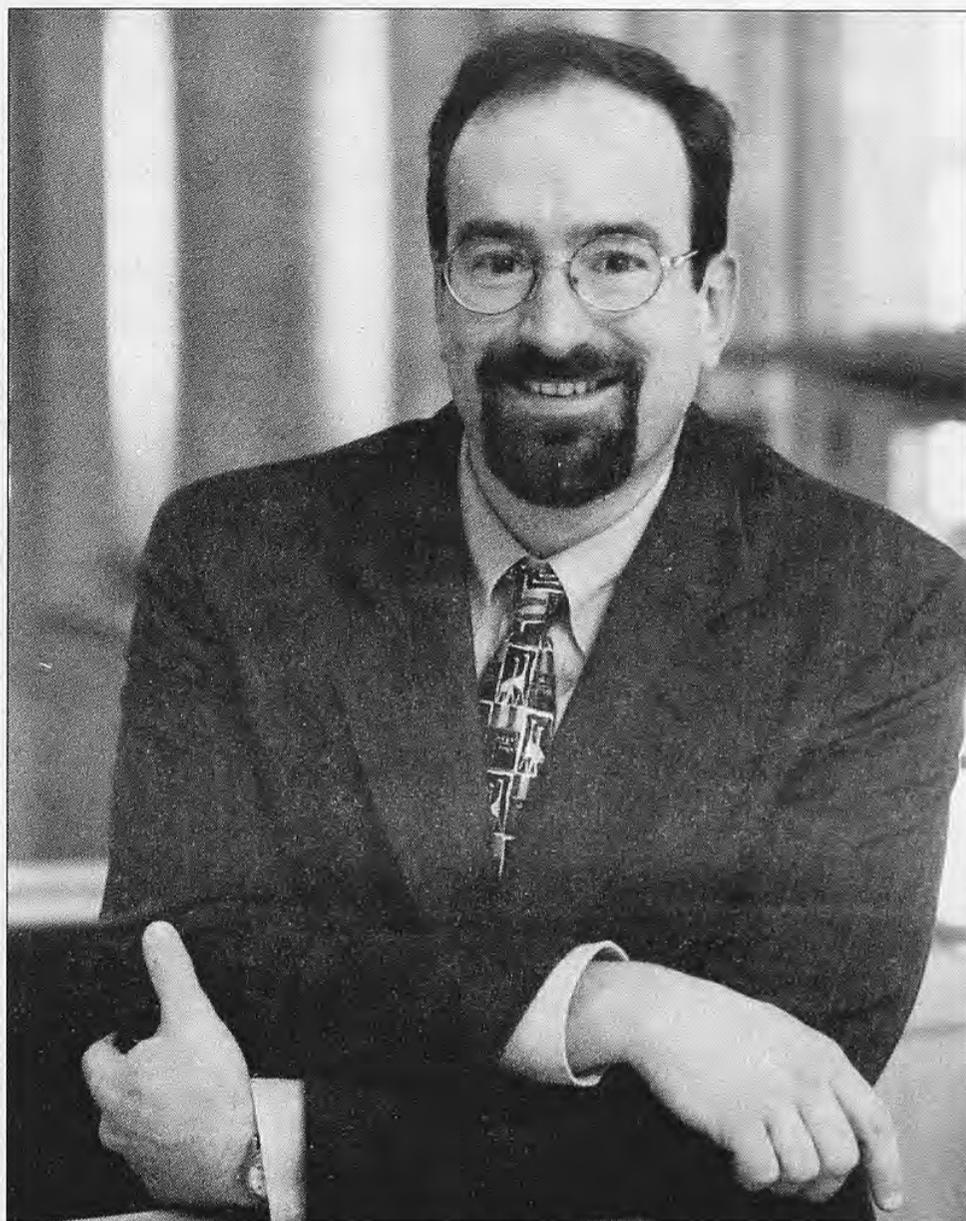

"Some of the most compelling documentation related to the country's first democratic election in 1994," Williams said. "The records illustrated the challenges of educating millions of voters who had never before had the opportunity to cast a ballot."

Much of the material is from abroad. For the three decades before 1990, parties like the ANC and PAC—and even anti-government materials—were banned in South Africa. As a result, the parties operated for many years in exile, from locations like London, New York, Dar-es-Salaam, Tanzania and Cairo.

When the ban was lifted in 1990, the parties came home and brought their materials with them. Many of the records came back in four-foot trunks and, from what Williams could tell, remained that way until the team started going through them.

"Virtually none of the material in the trunks was in folders," he said. "It was as if the contents of filing cabinets had simply been dumped into the trunks and shipped off."

"While the documentation illustrates efforts to raise international awareness of the evils of apartheid, the records also reflect internal power struggles and the minutiae of running an office—utility bills, insurance policies, leases, purchase orders and even junk mail," he said. "Sorting the wheat from the chaff was part of our task."

As part of a team from the University of Michigan, Brian Williams '88 has had an opportunity to help organize the records of South Africa's liberation movement.

Banned from South Africa, opposition groups like the ANC and PAC operated from a variety of sites abroad for decades. Their records came from many places and in varying degrees of organization. Above, Williams sorts while surrounded by a small portion of the collection.

Williams and a colleague did some scouting in March of 1998, meeting with officials to discuss technical considerations—like climate control for the collection—and to develop a sense of the scope of the project. Williams and nine others, including several U of M graduate students, went back for six weeks in May and June of 1998 to begin processing the material. This year's trip continues the effort.

The assignment is sometimes challenging politically. At one point last year, for example, the team opted to discard (with permission) several hundred duplicate copies of a PAC newsletter. The extras wound up in garbage cans on the campus quad, where the students and staff found them.

"Soon angry students and faculty approached us clutching copies of the newsletter and accused us of having an anti-PAC agenda and of destroying the archives," Williams said. "It took several meetings and a lot of diplomacy before the situation was defused."

Fort Hare was chosen to house the archives because of the university's status as South Africa's oldest historically black university. Founded in 1916, the university is the alma mater of liberation movement leaders like President Mandela, who in his autobiography Long Walk to Freedom describes it as "a beacon for African scholars from all over central and eastern Africa. For young black South Africans like myself, it was Oxford and Cambridge, Harvard and Yale, all rolled into one."

The archives is housed in the university's new National Heritage Cultural Studies Centre, which opened in September. The archives is part of the center's general goal to play, as noted in its Web site, "a pivotal role in the transformation of the University of Fort Hare from primarily a teaching institution into one that will focus equally on teaching, research, and community service."

Williams hopes that the Michigan team's efforts will help those researchers make use of an important part of South Africa's past, for the benefit of all.

"Hopefully, through projects like ours in the archives, the struggles of the liberation movement will be understood in their historical context," he said. "By preserving the past we remain optimistic that it can inform the future of what has come before, leading to greater understanding between all races." ✍

Images of a return

The miles of separation have been vanquished. The years in between are bridged, too. The Class of '64 laughs at the antics of classmate Thom Wombwell during the "Davy Jones Locker" skit (there's that nautical theme again...).

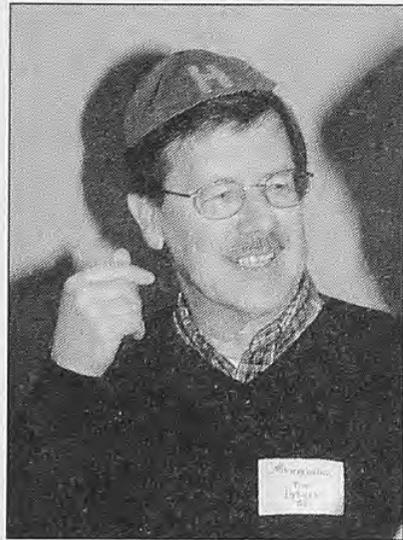

Elsewhere, two friends catch up during a quiet moment. More than 800 returned for the May 7-9 Alumni Weekend activities. They enjoyed each other, and the place, spending a few moments from busy lives to reflect and remember.

Class Notes

News and information for class notes, marriages, advanced degrees and deaths are compiled for news from Hope College by Greg Olgers '87.

News should be mailed to: Alumni News; Hope College Public Relations; 141 E. 12th St.; PO Box 9000; Holland, MI 49422-9000. Internet users may send to: alumni@hope.edu

All submissions received by the Public Relations Office by Tuesday, May 11, have been included in this issue. Because of the lead time required by this publication's production schedule, submissions received after that date (with the exception of obituary notices) have been held for the next issue, the deadline for which is Tuesday, July 6.

A number of the entries in this issue have been gleaned from the Spring, 1998, issue of The French Connection, the Hope College French Newsletter. News from Hope College periodically borrows from such departmental newsletters so that the information can be enjoyed by as broad an audience as possible.

1920s

James Neckers '23 of Carbondale, Ill., received a Distinguished Service Award from Southern Illinois University Carbondale during the university's May 14-15 commencement exercises. The awards honor those who contribute significantly to the state, region and/or university. He chaired SIUC's chemistry department for 36 years, retiring in 1967; the department grew significantly in both size and reputation during his tenure.

Tuesdays with Morrie, by Mitch Albom

"This very quick read about the author's conversations with his terminally ill and favorite college professor will prompt you both to reconsider what's really and ultimately important in life and to send a greeting to that Hope prof who most inspired you as a young adult."
(David James '76, adjunct assistant professor of English and director of the writing center)

To the Linksland, by Michael Bamberger

"The best golf book I have ever read (and the best book period)...The book, written in 1993, gives an account of Mr. Bamberger's pilgrimage to the mecca of golf, Scotland. He tells the story of his remarkable adventure in a way that shows he has a true love for the game and its history. This is a must-read for anyone who loves the game of golf."
(Todd Swanson, adjunct assistant professor of mathematics)

Marion Hanna '49 Weinmann and husband Charles are enjoying their retirement home on the North Oregon coast.

1950s

Gordon Beld '50 of Holland, Mich., is author of A Gentle Breeze from Gossamer Wings, a novel that will be published in the Judeo-Christian Ethics Series of PREP Publishing of Fayetteville, N.C. in September. The story brings together refugees from Pol Pot's holocaust in Cambodia and residents of a tranquil college town in Indiana. The book's foreword was written by Dr. Robert H. Schuller '47. Gordon was director of news services and publications for Alma (Mich.) College for 24 years, and has been involved with refugees since the early 1980s.

Carol Crist '52 Fern of Fenton, Mich., pianist, was accompanist for Pergolesi's Stabat Mater on Sunday, March 21, 1999. # The swing and I

By Gary Hayden '72

A ball game with a future king, long ago and far away

It is summer on the school yard baseball diamond. As the athletic director I don't have enough boys for two teams, so we're playing home run derby. Every player hits. It's more action and fun. I'm a steady underhand pitcher.

We go through the perpetual batting lineup about 10 times. Then I ask the 10- to 13-year-old players if I can bat. They agree, so I need a pitcher. I ask the sturdiest boy, a 13-year-old, if he wants to pitch. He is visiting from Massachusetts and playing first base. He is both confident and enthusiastic as he eagerly accepts the job. "I can do that Mr. Hayden!"

Now I tell you, like I tell my brother, that although I'm then 24, I have not played baseball since I was 14. I want to hit a long fly ball to give the fielders some excitement and exercise. The boys are playing deep.

The first pitch comes right across the plate. I swing. Cracck!! The crisp snap electrifies me with a solid hit on the first swing! But in nanoseconds my joy vanishes. The hard ball never lofts. Instead it's a fast line drive direct, non-stop, to the mound.

To my horror, the ball fires into the pitcher's stomach. Somehow still standing, he winces at the shock and doubles over, grabbing his middle.

"Oh oh!" I think in that moment of mishap anguish; the reaction of any baseball coach or observing parent.

Oh oh indeed. The pitcher's Bedu bodyguards sprint across the grass of the American Community School in Amman, Jordan. I drop the bat at the plate and jog to the mound. The uniformed soldiers wearing the yellow patches of the Royal Bodyguard surround the pitcher. Some cast a suspicious glance at me that says, "majoon faranji." That's Arabic for "crazy foreigner."

I see the pitcher, H.R.H. Prince Abdullah bin Hussein, oldest son of King Hussein of Jordan, bent over holding his stomach in pain. I'm praying that his health and wind return swiftly. Other thoughts flash before me. Will the soldiers brandish their automatic weapons? Will my principal, Sue Dahdah, fire me? Is my goose cooked?

The players, including Abdullah's brother Prince Feisal, also home on summer vacation from an American boarding school, and cousins Princes Talal and Ghazi bin Mohammed, gather round.

Still standing, Abdullah begins to recover. He has amazing poise. He never whimpers in pain. In Arabic he repeatedly tells his bodyguards he's okay, between gasping breaths. He does not cast blame. I find that relieving as I apologize to him for the errant hit. He is gracious. He says, Okay, okay. The Bedu relax. Eventually Prince Abdullah slowly walks off the field into the shade. His entourage follows.

That's the end of our home run derby. It is summer, 1975.

I have no idea how much baseball Abdullah, now His Majesty, King Abdullah II, of Jordan, has played in the past two dozen years. It doesn't matter. He's now in the Big Leagues anyway.

I found the new king has his late father's personality. Courage, strength, intelligence, enthusiasm, ease and grace. As King Hussein verbally ignored his cancer pain, so did young Abdullah contain his pain on the mound without complaint. Also I know King Abdullah has the Hashemite family sense of humor. These traits bode well.

On CNN I watch King Abdullah bury and mourn his father. Following the funeral, the new king easily takes on a receiving line of state leaders the likes of the world has not seen since the funeral of John F. Kennedy.

To me it is evident King Abdullah has the "Right Stuff" not only to continue his late father's peace policies and reforms, but to reach his own goals in his time too.

Although he has the goodwill of many in his kingdom and his neighborhood, I wish him well against the Mid East's hoary big hitters, base stealers and spit ball pitchers that may pop up or lurk in the outfield.

I certainly know this monarch's first pitch to me, and the world, was perfect. Plus, I know he can stop a line drive—a very important skill in this part of the world where the bases are always loaded, and armed too. Now history is giving him his turn at bat, and I am certain King Abdullah II will star in the real home run derby of the Middle East. Bet you a hamburger he's a Hall of Famer in the making. En sh'Allah. Allah willing.

A Winter's Tale, by Mark Helprin

"Kind of long, but really, really good. Kind of an urban-fantasy-fairy-tale kind of story, with lots of spiritualism thrown in. Also really liked Wally Lamb's She's Come Undone." (Sheryl Iott Richardson, part-time lecturer in music)

The Sword of Imagination: Memoirs of a Half-Century of Literary Conflict, by Russell Kirk

"A well-written exploration of the author's experiences in the academic community and political system. It is written dispassionately in the third person and gives a lot of insights into the last 50 years. It was published in 1995, one year after his death." (Dr. Jack Holmes, professor of political science and chair of the department)

In addition, Dr. Quinn will be working on his own research project: locating papyrological evidence for the trade between Rome and Aksum, the ancient Ethiopian kingdom beyond, but allied to, the Roman Empire. Since Egypt lies on both trade routes to Aksum (the Red Sea and the Nile River), Dr. Quinn hopes to find mention of the trade in papyrus documents such as tax records and merchants' letters home to their families.

Neal Sobania '68, director of international education and professor of history, is one of several collectors whose efforts are highlighted in two Web-based exhibitions of African art at Michigan State University.

The first, "Ethiopia: Traditions of Creativity," is a Web version of an exhibition of Ethiopian art, for which Dr. Sobania co-directed research, held at the university in 1994. The second, "African Connections: Perspectives on Collecting Culture," features objects from the Michigan State University Museum's collection.

"Ethiopia: Traditions of Creativity" is located on the World Wide Web at: www.h-net.msu.edu/~etoc

The Courage to Teach, by Parker Palmer

"For those who believe that teaching is simply one option in a long list of vocations, Parker Palmer's insights will inspire, challenge and change you. It matters little who, what or where you teach; please make sure you read this treasure."

(Dr. Ronald Wolhuis, associate professor of education)

Cry, the Beloved Country, by Alan Paton

"Because it is breath-taking prose about apartheid in South Africa in the middle of this century and how its practice affected two families, one white, one black. Its Christian themes and biblical parallels further enrich this story of fathers and sons."

(Nancy Nicodemus, professor emerita of English)

Hope sweeps All-Sports triad

After presenting a single all-sports award for seven decades, the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association this year instituted an expanded program to recognize men's and women's sports in addition to the cumulative effort.

The new configuration made no difference as far as Hope College athletics was concerned.

Already the winner of more all-sports awards than any other MIAA-member college, Hope swept all three of the reconfigured awards.

Hope won its league-record 22nd all-sports award, now known as the Commissioner's Cup, and captured the first men's and women's all-sports awards.

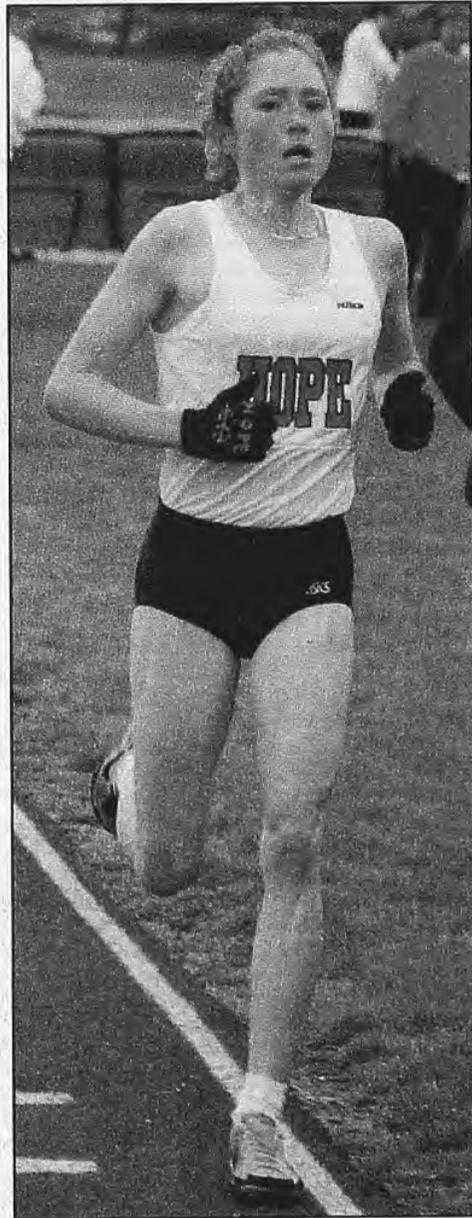

With championship teams in six conference sports, Hope led the Commissioner's Cup standings with 213 points, followed by Calvin with 192, Albion 151, Alma and Kalamazoo 137 each, Olivet 90, Adrian 70 and Defiance 64. Hope and Calvin were also one-two in the men's and women's all-sports standings.

During the year, Hope captured MIAA championships in women's golf, women's swimming, women's tennis and volleyball, and won co-championships in men's basketball and baseball.

The spring sports season was highlighted by outstanding team and individual efforts, including three All-American performances.

VICTORY IN SEASON FINALE GIVES DUTCHMEN BASEBALL TITLE

The Flying Dutchmen had their back to the fence during most of the league season in their bid to repeat as MIAA champions. By winning six of their last seven league games, including a season-ending showdown at Junior Jennifer Ernst ran to All-American honors with a school-record time in the 10,000 meter run at the NCAA Division III championships.

Senior Dean Esteves, seen here being congratulated by baseball coach Stuart Fritz, became the MIAA's all-time leading home run hitter.

Alma, coach Stuart Fritz's Dutchmen were able to gain a share of the championship and finish the season 18-17. The title was Hope's sixth in the decade of the '90s.

Senior rightfielder Ryan Tanis of Holland, Mich., was voted the league's most valuable player. Playing the final three weeks of the season with a leg injury, he inspired the Dutchmen to their third straight league crown. In one game, he hit home runs in three consecutive at-bats.

Six players were voted to the All-MIAA teams. Senior shortstop Dean Esteves of Jenison, Mich., was voted to the first team for the third consecutive year. He was joined on the first team by Tanis and sophomore third baseman Sean Bateman of Saline, Mich. Esteves became the MIAA's career leader in home runs with 10. Voted to the All-MIAA second team were senior second baseman Matt Klein of DeWitt, Mich., junior outfielder Ben Fellows of Lansing, Mich., and senior pitcher Adam Labbe of Cadillac, Mich.

DUTCH REPEAT AS MIAA WOMEN'S TENNIS CHAMPS

The Flying Dutch clinched their fourth straight MIAA championship by going undefeated in league dual matches and sweeping the conference tournament.

Coach Karen Page's Dutch posted a 17-5 overall dual match record. The Dutch have won 30 consecutive league matches over five seasons.

At the league tournament, Hope players captured championships in five-of-six singles flights and two-of-three doubles flights.

HOPE CROWNS TWO NCAA TRACK ALL-AMERICANS

Two Hope tracksters achieved All-American status at the NCAA Division III track and field championships. Sophomore Emily Sowers of Grand Rapids, Mich., finished fifth in the discus, while junior Jennifer Ernst of Westerville, Ohio, was seventh in the 10,000-meter run.

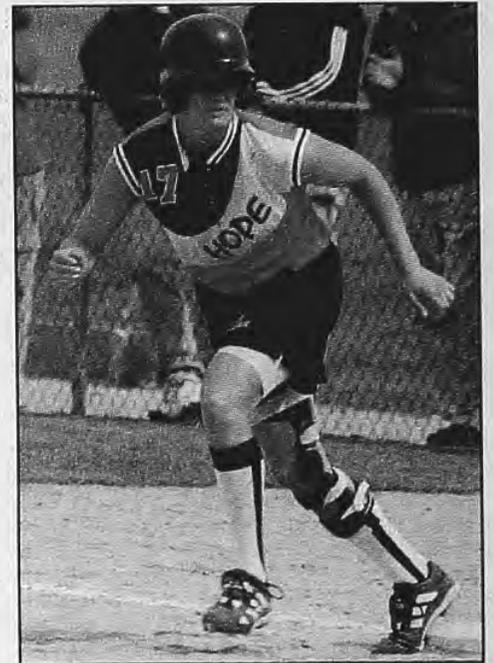

This was the second time that Hope has had two track All-Americans in the same year. It last occurred in 1987.

Competing at nationals for the second consecutive year, Sowers had a throw of 142 feet, 1 inch, in the finals. As a freshman she finished 15th in the nation. Earlier in the season, she established a school record with a throw of 145 feet, 7 inches.

Ernst had a school-record time (36:23.70) in becoming Hope's third NCAA All-American in the 10,000. She also competed in the 5,000-meter, finishing 15th in a field of 21 runners.

The Flying Dutch finished second in the MIAA women's track and field standings, while the Flying Dutchmen tied for third place in the men's field.

Seven tracksters were voted All-MIAA. Junior Paul Berke of Park Ridge, Ill., the league champion in the 10,000-meter run, was the only men's team honoree. Voted to the women's All-MIAA team were freshman Sarah Burgess of Niles, Mich.; Ernst; senior Becky Timmer of Pella, Iowa; freshman Elizabeth Chapman of Marquette, Mich.; junior Kim Richardson of Sanford, Mich.; and Sowers. Ernst was the MIAA champion in the 5,000 and 10,000 meters, Burgess captured the gold in the shotput, Sowers repeated as league champion in the discus and Richardson took first in the high jump.

Sophomore Carrie Scott marked an amazing comeback from an injury to achieve Division III All-America recognition.

Senior Paul Lillie and junior Jennifer Smith brought distinction to Hope's tennis program as each was named All-MIAA for a second year.
