

Fairfield University
DigitalCommons@Fairfield

Visual & Performing Arts Faculty Publications

Visual & Performing Arts Department

Fall 2007

Review of Aphrodite's Tortoise: The Veiled Woman of Ancient Greece

Marice Rose
Fairfield University, mrose@fairfield.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.fairfield.edu/visualandperformingarts-facultypubs>

Published by the Women's Classical Caucus (an affiliate of the American Philological Association). Publication available at <http://wccaucus.org/cloeli>.

The complete Fall 2007 issue available at http://wccaucus.org/wp-content/uploads/2011/10/cloelia_fall2007.pdf.

Peer Reviewed

Repository Citation

Rose, Marice, "Review of Aphrodite's Tortoise: The Veiled Woman of Ancient Greece" (2007). Visual & Performing Arts Faculty Publications. 12.

<https://digitalcommons.fairfield.edu/visualandperformingarts-facultypubs/12>

Published Citation

Rose, Marice. Review of Aphrodite's Tortoise: The Veiled Woman of Ancient Greece by Lloyd Llewellyn-Jones (Classical Press of Wales, 2004) in Cloelia (Fall 2007), 37(1), 26-27.

This item has been accepted for inclusion in DigitalCommons@Fairfield by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@Fairfield. It is brought to you by DigitalCommons@Fairfield with permission from the rights-holder(s) and is protected by copyright and/or related rights. You are free to use this item in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses, you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/or on the work itself. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@fairfield.edu.

Women's Classical Caucus Newsletter

CLÆLIA

VOLUME 37, NUMBER 1

FALL 2007

In Memoriam
Corinne Crawford 1980-2007

Women's Classical Caucus:
35 years of bringing women to Classics

2005 WOMEN'S CLASSICAL CAUCUS, INC.

STEERING COMMITTEE:

CO-CHAIRS

Jennifer Ebbeler

Sally MacEwen

SECRETARY-TREASURER

Maryline Parca

NEWSLETTER EDITOR

Sally MacEwen

MEMBERS AT LARGE

Joy Connolly

Allison Futrell

Micaela Janan

Mireille Lee

Lauren Petersen

Susan Prince

LIAISONS AND ASSOCIATES:

EMAILLIST OWNER

Ruby Blondell

AIA LIAISON

Emily Miller Bonney

ARCHIVIST

Janet Martin

AWARDS COORDINATOR

Joy Connolly

BOOK REVIEW EDITOR

Ann Michelini

LILLIAN DOHERTY

Mentoring and Membership

CANADIAN LIAISON

Fanny Dolansky

COMMITTEE ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN AND MINORITY GROUPS LIAISON

Kristina Milnor

CONSULTANT

Barbara McManus

ELECTIONS

Ann O. Koloski-Ostrow

GRADUATE STUDENT LIAISONS

Alex Dressler

Lindsay Morse

PANEL COORDINATION

Patricia Salzman-Mitchell

LAMBDA LIAISON

Ruby Blondell

Cloelia: Women's Classical Caucus Newsletter is the official publication of the Women's Classical Caucus and will in future be distributed once a year, in the fall. We are always happy to receive articles, reports, news items, and announcements of interest to WCC members. Please send corrections and comments about an issue to the editor:

Prof. Sally MacEwen

Agnes Scott College

141 E. College Avenue

Decatur, GA 30030-3797

404-471-6369/6000

smacewen@agnesscott.edu

Essays describing issues in which the WCC may become involved or situations where WCC action and support may be needed are welcome. They should be limited to 800 words. Essays on more general or theoretical topics should be limited to 1200 words.

Writers interested in contributing should contact the editor at least one month prior to deadline to inform her of their intentions. Readers who know of potential writers may suggest them to the editor who will contact the writer about the suggested topic. Announcements and calls should be sent directly to the editor. These should include a title, all relevant dates, address and email of contact people, and a brief description. Generally announcements should be 100-300 words, but exceptions are made in cases of events especially interesting to the membership.

Preferred means of submission is by email, as either an attachment readable by Word or an embedded email message.

Thanks to our wonderful Webmistress, Chris Ann Matteo, our website is now an excellent place to find additional information about the Caucus: <http://www.wcclassics.org> editor@wccaucus.org or

chrisann_matteo@eburke.org

The APA website also has a link to our site.

The Editorial Board for Cloelia is made up of:

Marice Rose (MRose@mail.fairfield.edu)

Jeri Fogel (jerise@jerise.com)

Ann Michelini (Ann.Michelini@starband.net)

THIS PUBLICATION WAS MADE POSSIBLE BY THE GENEROUS ASSISTANCE OF THE AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE AND ITS DEPARTMENT OF CLASSICS . THANKS ALSO TO ANN MICHELINI FOR EDITING BOOK REVIEWS, AND TO ALL THE WCC MEMBERS WHO SENT MATERIAL.

BOOK REVIEWS

Ann Michelini, Editor

Lloyd Llewellyn-Jones, Aphrodite's Tortoise: The Veiled Woman of Ancient Greece. Classical Press of Wales, 2003. ISBN: 0-9543845-3-9. Pp. x + 358. 173 black-and-white figures. Cloth. $69.50.

Lloyd Llewellyn-Jones has written a fascinating and essential book on the subject of women's habitual veiling in ancient Greece. By analyzing veiling as a manifestation of a male ideology that preferred silent and invisible women, as well as analyzing the practical realities of women's wearing the garment, the author reveals key aspects of Greek gender relations. Women's veiling was so commonplace, in public and at home before unrelated men, that literary sources do not discuss it in detail. Through careful readings of texts and images, therefore, Llewellyn-Jones shows the extent of the custom and its social ramifications. He also uses comparative anthropological evidence from ancient and modern veiling societies effectively.

In Chapter One, the author suggests that scholars have not sufficiently acknowledged the extent of ancient Greek veiling because of modern Orientalist notions linking the act of veiling to the suppression of women in the Middle East. He argues that the Near Eastern origins of the Greek veil have led to its existence being overlooked or even consciously avoided, as shown by scholars' use of vocabulary such as "mantle," "cloak," or "hood" when referring to the garment (7).

Chapter Two focuses on Greek terms used for different types of veils, and the difficulties of matching the often vague terminology with painted or sculpted images. Llewellyn-Jones proposes to use more specific Arabic vocabulary for the varying veil types throughout the book, which he does successfully. He includes a table of the Greek words and definitions from lexicons (36). Although the table does not solve the problem of the meaning of the terms, it does show the variety of language used and therefore the prevalence of veiling.

Chapter Three presents the different veil styles used by Greeks from the eighth century B.C.E. to the first century C.E. with art as evidence. Llewellyn-Jones acknowledges that different geographic regions likely had variations in costume, as is the case today, and some fashions may have come and gone quickly. His compelling conclusion is that the face and body became more hidden over time, culminating in the Hellenistic tegidion, a face-covering veil with eye-holes (62-64). The organization of this chapter is somewhat confusing and a chart or table of trends in art such as the lexicographical one that ends Chapter One would be helpful.

In Chapter Four, Llewellyn-Jones again examines visual sources, this time looking for an absence of veils in contradiction of literary sources. For example, vases depict unveiled women in public spaces such as fountain houses, where they would have been covered (88). In other cases women are unveiled in the presence of men, which would not have been the case in reality. The author suggests that in artistic contexts the veil was removed in order to reveal to the (presumed male) patron what was normally hidden from his gaze. Such a depiction would be valuable, desired, and erotically charged, as it gave the patron a window onto a feminine world he normally would not have seen. The argument is compelling, especially when the author points out scenes where veils are present, but the women are depicted as having pushed them down onto their necks (91-98). Llewellyn-Jones, however, does not acknowledge that many of these scenes appear on vases that were used exclusively by women, and therefore an intended female audience must be considered as well.

Book reviews, continued

When veiled women do appear in sculpture and painting, they are often depicted as holding the veils away from their faces. One of the most significant contributions of the book is the rethinking of the so-called anakalypsis gesture. The gesture is identified by most scholars as symbolizing the bride's unveiling during the wedding ceremony. Llewellyn-Jones argues that this identification is not supported by literary evidence, and the gesture can also be seen as moving the veil over the face (104-07). Chapter Five examines the veil as a symbol of social status. Although in Homer veiling signifies a noblewoman (122-140), from the classical period on, veils were worn by all classes except (probably) slaves. Chapter Six links veiling to aidos, with that term's implications of modesty, respect, and even shame. The author makes the point that although the veil was used by men to depersonalize women, women were able to turn it into a means of expression. As in contemporary veiling societies, the flexible nature of the veil-- its ability to be manipulated-- was its own form of communication in response to different situations and people (177).

The book's title comes from Chapter Seven's discussion. Llewellyn-Jones uses the tortoise, once depicted with Aphrodite in a sculpture by Phidias, as a metaphor for ancient Greek women: silent, private, enclosed (190). Significantly, like a tortoise, a veiled Greek woman carried her enclosure with her. Although a means of subjugation, the veil did allow Greek women to leave the confines of their homes and be in public among strangers. Llewellyn-Jones effectively offers the analogy of veil and house through iconographic, literary, and anthropological evidence (192-199).

In Chapter Eight, the author examines the wedding veil and revisits the anakalyp-teria discussion. He explains that weddings involved not one but a series of unveilings, culminating in the groom's final uncovering of the bride in the bridal chamber. Llewellyn-Jones approaches this practice as a manifestation of the bride's being an object of male gaze and control. In Chapter Nine, the author links the veiling of the woman's head with the prevention of sexual pollution escaping through the orifices of her face. Chapter Ten discusses women's use of the veil in displays of both eroticism and grief. Both displays invite the viewer to gaze upon the woman, as opposed to the normal function of the veil to make the woman invisible.

This book is a major contribution that will become a standard in the field; one looks forward to the further discussion it will promote.

Marice E. Rose, Fairfield University

