ABSTRACT

The National Register of Historic Places, as outlined in the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, records places and spaces worthy of preservation throughout the United States. The legislation indicates, “the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expand and maintain a National Register of Historic Places composed of districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects significant in American history, architecture, archaeology, engineering, and culture.”<sup>1</sup> The National Register should arguably reflect the nation’s history, which many resources claim it to achieve: “the National Register is the nation’s inventory of historic places and the national repository of documentation on the variety of historic property types, significance, abundance, condition, ownership, needs, and other information.”<sup>2</sup> However, because the nomination of new listings is a social and political process, it seems that the National Register may be a repository to show preservation preferences over time.

This study investigates whether the National Register in South Carolina meets the goal of being a comprehensive repository of buildings, structures, sites, and objects that narrate South Carolina’s history, using the National Register listings from South Carolina to see if they are evenly distributed across categories. This investigation provides insight into the historic preservation movement and the National Register. A database of all of South Carolina's National Register listings provides the foundation for analysis. Categories analyzed for each property are: National Register Criteria, architectural classifications and styles, areas and periods of significance, as well as other elements included on nomination forms. The resulting graphs, charts, and other data visualization tools represent the patterns and put forward a unique perspective on the collection of properties that encompass South Carolina's contributions to the National Register. This thesis presents a critical evaluation of the National Register by analyzing listings in the state of South Carolina to determine whether or not it lives up to its mission of representing the diverse history of the state. Findings indicate that the 1,556 listings added between 1966 and 2017 are fully representative of South Carolina's history, however with uneven distributions. The methodology can be replicated in other states and results can inform future investigations leading to a broader range of properties on the National Register of Historic Places.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would first like to thank my thesis committee – Amalia Leifeste, Carter Hudgins, and Kristopher King – for all of their help and guidance throughout this entire process.

To all of my friends and family who were supportive and encouraging throughout my academic studies, I thank you all. I would especially like to thank my parents, Lori and Scott Marks, for always being open to read drafts to make sure they made sense to someone outside of the field; to my brother Alec for probably never reading this from cover to cover; and to Douglas Halpert for his unwavering love and support while we lived eight states apart during my time in graduate school.

Last but not least, this thesis is published proof that Beth Newburger Schwartz’s many history day trips were worth it for at least one granddaughter.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

“The historical and cultural foundations of the Nation should be preserved as a living part of our community life and development in order to give a sense of orientation to the American people.”<sup>3</sup>

The passage of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966 was a major turning point for the historic preservation movement in the United States. As outlined in this major piece of legislation, the National Register of Historic Places includes the nation’s spaces and places worthy of preservation. Since its inception, the National Register has become a repository of buildings, structures, sites, objects, and landscapes that are architecturally, historically, and archeologically significant.<sup>4</sup> All listings were nominated, and then deemed worthy of recognition and inclusion in the National Register through a process involving submissions to the State Historic Preservation Office by property owners, historical societies, preservation organizations, government agencies, and other individuals or groups.

The purpose of the National Register has always been to recognize and preserve important elements of the nation’s history, however attitudes and culture have influenced what is considered worthy of preservation. Additionally, preservation has changed its purview over time. As Robert Stipe states in A Richer Heritage: Preservation in the Twenty-First Century: “preservation’s basic values have vastly changed since 1966. The early associative values centered almost exclusively on history and architecture as the most valued cultural resources. In recent years, however, we have moved beyond that narrow view.”<sup>5</sup> The National Register now includes more than just individual buildings, but also districts, sites, structures, and objects significant in history, architecture, archeology, engineering, and culture.<sup>6</sup> Thus it is important to look back and reflect on trends and biases that can have an effect on the types of entities added to the National Register.

Because the nomination of new listings is a social and political process, it seems that the National Register may be a repository to show preservation preferences over time. While listings from recent years include a much broader view of history and a wider range of properties than when it was first established in 1966, a basic review reveals that tendencies still lean towards prioritizing architectural significance and associations with important mainstream historical figures above other applicable factors. With these inclinations in mind, this investigation seeks to find an answer to the following question:

Does the National Register of Historic Places meet its goal of being a comprehensive list of buildings, structures, sites, and objects that narrate our full and evolving national experience as seen in South Carolina with the state-wide listings?

The hypothesis creating the spark to this investigation was that positive attitudes towards specific architectural styles would be reflected in a higher proportion of buildings of that type compared to other styles on the National Register. As a specific example, Art Deco has come to be more than just a popular architectural style, and has also had an impact on fashion, art, and furniture design. Unlike other twentieth century architectural styles, Art Deco always seems to be thought of in a positive light. While preferences in architectural style are evident, other considerations for National Register nominations, such as areas and periods of significance, may show a hierarchy of importance as well.

By expanding the scope of analysis to consider multiple categories incorporated in the nomination process, this investigation will shed light on how biases towards architectural styles and areas and periods of significance come forward in what is deemed worthy of recognition and preservation.

The National Register Process

The nomination process is the crucial step for a property to become part of the National Register. It is the responsibility of State Historic Preservation Offices to formally nominate properties, with private individuals, groups, and local governments initiating the process and preparing the necessary documents.<sup>7</sup> When nominating a property to be considered for listing, a plethora of information must be included in the nomination form.

The interested party must fill out a nomination form, which can be provided by the State Historic Preservation Office, and also available online through the National Park Service. This form must include the historic name of the property, and successive names when applicable. Administrative information vital for identification includes the name, address, and category of property. Other property elements that must be highlighted are historic and current functions and uses.

Architectural descriptions and classifications accompany properties having architectural or historical importance. On the form, one must select from given classification terms, and provide a written narrative description of the property. Following the architectural description, a statement of significance provides the qualification for listing; areas and periods of significance; associated dates, persons, and cultural affiliations; and the architect or builder. This section also has a narrative description included, which explains the importance of the previously mentioned information entered into the form. Bibliographic references are also included in the nomination form, as well as indication of any previous documentation on file with the National Park Service.

Geographical data allows others to locate the property, and will be used to include the listing on publicly available mapping data with other National Register properties. The final section of the nomination form identifies the person who prepared the nomination. This provides the State Historic Preservation Office and National Park Service the ability to contact someone should a question arise or additional information be requested.

To attain listing on the National Register, the property must be deemed eligible based on the information provided through the nomination form. As eloquently described by Stipe, “significance may be based on association with events or persons, embodiment of distinctive architectural characteristics or high artistic values, collective importance as an entity whose components may individually lack significance, or the possession of information important in prehistory or history.”<sup>8</sup> As time moves forward, the number of properties eligible continues to grow as they mature into an age of historical significance on a local, state, or national level. An analysis of listed properties illuminates patterns related to certain categories provided for each property.

Nomination Form Elements of Analysis

For the purpose of this study, the following elements from the National Register nomination form are highlighted below: date of listing, National Register Criteria, architectural classification, area of significance, period of significance, property category, historic and current functions, and preparer. A more comprehensive explanation and description of each element can be found in the Methodology in Chapter 3.

Date of Listing

The National Register of Historic Places came into existence through the enactment of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966.<sup>9</sup> While properties on the National Register date back to prehistory, the dates associated with their inclusion on the National Register start in 1966.

National Register Criteria

In addition to basic eligibility requirements, the National Register Criteria identify how and why a property is eligible for the National Register. A property must meet at least one of the Criteria. The four National Register Criteria are outlined below:

- A. Property is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history;
- B. Property is associated with the lives of persons significant in our past;
- C. Property embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or represents the work of a master, or possesses high artistic

- values, or represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components lack individual distinction; and
- D. Property has yielded, or is likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.<sup>10</sup>

Architectural Classification

Architectural classifications are divided into categories and subcategories, and may also include other stylistic terminology to be as specific as possible when describing the style. While this classification includes selecting terms from a predetermined list as well as providing a narrative description, this study will only use categories, subcategories, and other stylistic terminology explicitly stated on nomination forms for architectural classification terms. A complete chart of all styles can be found in Appendix B.

Area of Significance

To further prove the property's significance in addition to the National Register Criteria, at least one area of significance must be selected from prehistory or history. Areas of significance include: agriculture, architecture, archeology, art, commerce, communications, community planning and development, conservation, economics, education, engineering, entertainment/recreation, ethnic heritage, exploration/settlement, health/medicine, industry, invention, landscape architecture, law, literature, maritime history, military, performing arts, philosophy,

Period of Significance

A property attains its significance qualifying it for inclusion on the National Register at a specific moment or during a certain period of time. There is no restriction on duration, however it is defined as “the length of time when a property was associated with important events, activities, or persons, or attained the characteristics which qualify it for National Register listing.”<sup>12</sup>

Property Category

A property can either be a building, district, site, structure, or object. If a property has more than one type, it is marked by the most applicable category. A building’s primary use is to shelter any form of human activity. Common examples include houses, churches, and hotels. Sites refer to places themselves that hold significance related to an event, activity, building or structure in the fields of history, culture, and archeology. A site does not rely on anything to still remain in existence at the location. Not to be confused with buildings, structures are any constructed entities that were intended for other uses rather than human activity and shelter. Further distinguished from buildings and structures, objects are relatively small, simply built, and usually artistic. Districts can possess a grouping of a number of category types, such as college campuses, central business districts, and landscaped parks.<sup>13</sup>

Historic and Current Functions

A property can provide many functions and uses throughout its history. On the nomination form, it is vital to be as specific as possible while indicating which uses the property has served. Properties can serve more than one use, and it is encouraged to include them all, however the primary use should always be listed first. Data categories for functions and uses include: domestic, commerce/trade, social, government, education, religion, funerary, recreation and culture, agriculture/subsistence, industry/processing/extraction, health care, defense, landscape, transportation, work in progress, unknown, vacant/not in use, and other.<sup>14</sup> A full chart with function categories, subcategories, and examples can be found in Appendix D.

Preparer

Outlined on the nomination form, the preparer is the point of contact for the State Historic Preservation Office or the National Park Service regarding the property nominated. This person could be anyone, such as the property owner, a hired consultant, or a member of a historical society.

Significance of Investigation

As discussed above, many factors are considered when adding a new listing to the National Register, and none should be overlooked. How they are interpreted differs on a case-by-case basis, which accounts for the ever-growing number of listings and deciding factors for their inclusion. It is important to be self-reflective as the purview of historic preservation changes over time and the types of properties added to the National Register represent different architectural styles, areas and periods of significance, and historic and current functions and uses. This investigation aims to analyze listings on the National Register in South Carolina through components included in their nomination forms to determine the variety and diversity within the collection of listings as a whole. Preferences in architectural styles or historic eras will result in disproportionate representation in those favored categories.

This investigation of representation within the National Register in South Carolina will provide insight as to how preference can affect preservation trends. As Stipe states, “although the National Register program has undoubtedly surpassed the expectations of its creators in many ways, its growth has introduced another set of challenges. One is the recognition that the register has not fulfilled the original goal of becoming the all-inclusive list of what is significant in the nation’s history.”<sup>15</sup> By recognizing the challenges of creating and maintaining a truly all-inclusive

National Register, moving forward there can be concentrated efforts to include more listings from underrepresented categories that also embody the historical and cultural foundations of the nation.

LITERATURE REVIEW

The goal of this investigation is to analyze the National Register of Historic Places with respect to the diversity of properties listed in the state of South Carolina. In order to be an adequately self-reflective professional field, it is important to look back and evaluate historic preservation practices and priorities to make sure they are truly representative of the entire nation, just as the National Register was intended to be. This also creates an opportunity to gain a better understanding of the patterns and priorities behind preservation initiatives. The following literature review encompasses technical writings about the National Register nomination process as well as books and articles about the history and evolution of historic preservation in the United States.

The majority of technical literature focuses on the National Register, the nomination process, and how to apply eligibility and significance connections. Of primary focus in this category is the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, as amended through 1992. Among other policies and programs, the act sets up the National Register maintained by the Department of the Interior. As outlined, it states, “the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expand and maintain a National Register of Historic Places composed of districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects significant in American history, architecture, archaeology, engineering, and culture.”<sup>16</sup> From this act, technical publications and sources followed.

The National Park Service leads the way in helpful resources and documents to provide guidance to those interested in nominating a property to the National Register. Many of these are available through their website.<sup>17</sup> To emphasize the importance of the National Historic Preservation Act, the National Park Service reiterates, “it was the first national policy governing preservation and it would shape the fate of many of our historic and cultural sites over the next half-century. There had been earlier measures to foster preservation – the Antiquities Act of 1906 and the Historic Sites Act of 1935 – but none were as sweeping or as influential as the National Historic Preservation Act.”<sup>18</sup>

The “National Register Federal Program Regulations” outline rules and conventions about the program.<sup>19</sup> Other pages of online resources available through the National Park Service cover frequently asked questions. They outline the functions of the National Register and the greater goal of coordinating and supporting efforts to identify, evaluate, and protect America’s historic resources. This includes reviewing nominations, helping qualified historic properties receive benefits and incentives, and offering guidance on historic places through the National Register Bulletin series.<sup>20</sup>

Out of the National Register Bulletin series providing assistance on evaluating, documenting, and listing different types of historic properties, Bulletins 15 and 16 cover the basics of the nomination process and the critical criteria considered for evaluation. Both published in 1997, “How to Apply the National Register Criteria of Evaluation”<sup>21</sup> and “How to Complete the National Register Registration Form”<sup>22</sup> are invaluable references for anyone interested in nominating a property to be added to the National Register. By following the directions outlined in these two Bulletins, one can determine if the property in question is able to stand up and fit within the National Register Criteria, and then prepare the nomination in an appropriate manner to be officially considered by the state and federal government agencies involved.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>23</sup> In reviewing guidance for completing the National Register Registration Form, further research was conducted on architectural movements and styles outside of the recommended resources provided in National Register Bulletin 16. Extra sources referenced include: Ward Bucher, ed., Dictionary of Building Preservation (New York: John Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1996); Patricia Bayer, Art Deco Interiors: Decoration and Design Classics of the 1920s and 1930s (Boston: Little Brown Company, 1990); Barbara Capitman, Michael D. Kinerk, and Dennis W. Wilhelm, Rediscovering Art

Over time the National Register and properties deemed worthy of addition has expanded, and newer publications have reflected this widening view. One publication by Linda Flint McClelland, Presenting Nature: The Historic Landscape Design of the National Park Service 1916 to 1942 (1993), offers a history of park landscapes from the early- to mid-twentieth century and their significance, and direction for preparing their National Register nominations. As historic districts and full neighborhoods started being recognized and added to the National Register, more publications about larger property listings emphasizing the importance of suburbanization came into circulation. One such Bulletin by David L. Ames and McClelland, “Historic Residential Suburbs: Guidelines for Evaluation and Documentation for the National Register of Historic Places” (2002), offers background history on suburbs and residential districts to provide context and guidance for nominating them to the National Register. Further expansion in what could be added to the National Register included sites and natural landscapes, which did not rely as much – or at all – on the built environment as buildings, districts, and structures require.

Moving into the twenty-first century, National Park Service publications and theme studies published highlight the importance of diversity, especially regarding the National Historic Landmark and National Register of Historic Preservation programs. Theme studies published recently include: “Finding A Path Forward:

They are also accessible tools to educate the public about such elements and eras, ideally resulting in more National Historic Landmarks and National Register nominations to more comprehensively cover the United States’ full and evolving national experience.

The second major category of literature covers the history and evolution of historic preservation in the United States. Ranging from just before the passage of the National Historic Preservation Act through 2018, these books and articles emphasize the importance of historic preservation and the National Register while recognizing that the scope of what is deemed worthy of preservation has changed over time. They provide insight into how the National Historic Preservation Act and the National Register of Historic Places came to be, and how the Department of the Interior and State Historic Preservation Offices took on the brunt of the organizing power behind nominating properties to the National Register.

On the verge of the passage of the National Historic Preservation Act, Charles Hosmer's Presence of the Past (1965) reflected on the period of 1850-1926. Walter Muir Whitehill of the Boston Athenaeum wrote in the Forward: "the author shows us that until the early years of this century historic preservation was chiefly concerned with buildings in which great men had lived or great events had taken place."<sup>25</sup> While this was the motivation for early preservation initiatives, historic connections to influential people of the past still had validity in contemporary times.

Twenty years after the National Historic Preservation Act passed, Barry Mackintosh provided a history of its administration and successive amendments in The National Historic Preservation Act and the National Park Service: A History (1986). Mackintosh points out the successes and gains made possible by historic preservation legislation, while the entire work revolves around the importance of the National Register. One reviewer of Mackintosh's book noted, "the National Register has never been set in stone, as monumental as some of its listings might seem. Controversies, issues, and changes surround it politically, intellectually, and programmatically today as much as twenty years ago. The preservation imperatives of the 1966 Act and its amendments are moving into new worlds with as yet unforeseen repercussions, only alluded to by Mackintosh."<sup>26</sup>

Richard Longstreth's essay, "Architectural History and the Practice of Historic Preservation in the United States” (1999), brought about another insightful reflection on the preservation movement at the beginning of the twenty-first century. The scope of the National Register evolved further and widened to include properties with local, state, or national significance. While the National Register has matured, Longstreth warned about the emphasis placed on architectural style and that it had taken a front seat in what is worth preserving.<sup>27</sup>

Just following the turn of the twenty-first century, A Richer Heritage: Historic Preservation in the Twenty-First Century (2003), edited by Robert Stipe, highlighted the evolution of historic preservation and pointed to how the movement continues to change. Supporting Longstreth’s essay, A Richer Heritage notes, “preservation’s basic values have vastly changed since 1966. The early associative values centered almost exclusively on history and architecture as the most valued cultural resources. In recent years, however, we have moved beyond that narrow view.”<sup>28</sup>

Giving Preservation a History: Histories of Historic Preservation in the United States (2004) provided a series of essays compiled by Max Page and Randall Mason offering new perspectives about the preservation movement by reflecting on its past and evolution over time. Page and Mason state, “historic preservation has been one of the broadest and longest-lasting land-use reform efforts in this country. It is therefore ironic that we have so little understanding of its history.”<sup>29</sup> This collection of essays was intended to contribute to the process of understanding historic preservation’s place in the nation, just as this investigation aims to shed light on the National Register’s connection to the full and evolving national experience.

Within the same decade, the third edition of William Murtagh’s Keeping Time: The History and Theory of Preservation in America (2005) explained how large of an influence the historic preservation movement has had on America’s built landscape. As the first Keeper of the National Register, Murtagh looked back to the past, as well as forward to the future. This comprehensive and accessible text delved into the origins of the preservation movement – highlighting the early tendency to associate history with prominent male figures – and then illustrated how the movement has changed over time toward expanding coverage beyond buildings to districts, sites, and landscapes with historic connections.

John Sprinkle, Jr. added more insight on the National Register and preservation with Crafting Historic Preservation Criteria: The National Register of Historic Places and American Historic Preservation (2014). Published just before the fiftieth anniversary of the National Historic Preservation Act, Sprinkle referred to Hosmer’s Presence of the Past, noting that early twentieth century preservation advocates either favored historic and inspirational values of historic sites or the artistic qualities of architecture. Sprinkle also gave preservation its own history to help understand how the field developed its fundamental procedures.<sup>30</sup>

Looking ahead to the present and future of historic preservation and the National Register, two relevant and recent articles came from Creating Historic Preservation in the 21st Century (2018), edited by Richard Wagner and de Teel Patterson Tiller. “Tough Decisions and Exciting Possibilities: Preservation’s Next 50 Years” by John Englander called for a recalibration of the rules of preservation for the next half century. As the preservation movement marches forward into the future, Englander anticipated there will be more diversity within the preservation world and the types of places and spaces recognized by the National Register.<sup>31</sup> Bryan Orthel and Barbara Anderson, in “‘This Will Kill That’: Technology and the Social Construction of Preservation,” argued that historic preservation practices have not been able to keep up with technological advances or shifts in cultural values. Orthel and Anderson state, “while this process solicits differing values, authority has remained centralized to preservation professionals who determine which values will be recognized.”<sup>32</sup> As the historic preservation movement marches forward, the efforts of nominating and adding properties to the National Register must remain a high priority within the field, when new technologies and protocols further change the scope and purview of historic preservation.

As Sprinkle recommends, “from time to time – say every 50 years or so – it is prudent and reasonable to take a look backward; to try to understand ‘why we do what we do’ in historic preservation.”<sup>33</sup> Looking back to relevant literature, a number of sources either give explicit instructions in order to nominate a property to the National Register, or give critical commentary on the evolution of the nomination process and the larger picture of preservation. Once the nomination process is outlined, or the evolution of historic preservation has been reviewed, that is usually where the literature stops.<sup>34</sup> Technical literature has become more about trends in preservation interests and technology, instead of centering around the National Register, while scholarly literature remains thin. There is a significant gap where an evaluation of the National Register as a representative and equitable entity would be very useful. This investigation and assessment of National Register listings in the state of South Carolina will serve to test the theories and arguments presented, and fill the literature gap.

METHODOLOGY

In order to execute a successful investigation regarding South Carolina's contributions to the National Register of Historic Places, this chapter outlines the method observed to answer the following question:

Does the National Register of Historic Places meet its goal of being a comprehensive list of buildings, structures, sites, and objects that narrate our full and evolving national experience as seen in South Carolina with the state-wide listings?

This is an important investigation because it sheds light on how historical importance and elements of the nation's history translate into historic preservation preferences, which should be highlighted on the National Register. To determine if National Register listings from South Carolina are fully representative of the state's history, multiple elements from nomination forms were pulled into a comprehensive database, and then sorted by those categories to observe patterns and proportions relative to the whole collection of listings in South Carolina.

The data set for this investigation is comprised of the 1,556 listings on the National Register of Historic Places in the State of South Carolina, as of December 5, 2017. This data set was accessible through the National Park Service, and was downloaded on October 12, 2018 as a Microsoft Excel spreadsheet containing every listing on the National Register up until that date from all states and territories. For the purpose of this study, the data set was narrowed down to only those listings in South Carolina.<sup>35</sup>

Each listing on the resulting Microsoft Excel spreadsheet included a National Register reference number, historic name, alternate name(s) if relevant, listing date, National Historic Landmark date if present, city, county, and street address.<sup>36</sup> The reference number and historic name associated with each listing were essential for gathering the necessary information connected to this study. Using the reference number and historic name as search terms for two online databases,<sup>37</sup> information on the following nomination form elements was collected:

- Date of Listing: This date indicates when a listing was added to the National Register. All dates in this category are no earlier than 1966.<sup>38</sup> This

<sup>35</sup> National Register listings are available to download in various formats online: National Park Service, "National Register Database and Research," National Register of Historic Places, last modified September 18, 2018, <<https://www.nps.gov/subjects/nationalregister/database-research.htm>>.

<sup>36</sup> This investigation does not pertain to National Historic Landmarks, and is only a critical evaluation of South Carolina's contributions to the National Register of Historic Places. More information on the National Historic Landmarks program, which includes historic places that hold national significance, can be found here: "National Historic Landmarks Program," National Park Service, last modified August 29, 2018, <<https://www.nps.gov/orgs/1582/index.htm>>.

<sup>37</sup> The two online databases used for this study were the National Park Service's Digital Archive on NPGallery and the South Carolina Department of Archives and History's South Carolina Historic Properties Record. They will be described in greater detail below.

information was essential to graph listings over time, and patterns over time in regards to various elements noted below.

- National Register Criteria: Every listing on the National Register must meet at least one of the four Criteria to be eligible. These Criteria require that the building, site, structure, or object be associated with an important event (Criterion A), person (Criterion B), historic architecture or engineering (Criterion C), or hold strong informational or archeological potential (Criterion D).<sup>39</sup> A full description of the National Register Criteria can be found in Appendix A.
- Architectural Classification: Architectural classifications are predetermined from a chart available for reference in National Register Bulletin 16, as well as included in Appendix B. Architectural classifications listed indicate aesthetic qualities of listings, which demonstrates patterns based on stylistic preferences.
- Area of Significance: Each listing also pertains to at least one area of significance. Possible areas of significance are: agriculture, architecture, archeology, art, commerce, communications, community planning and development, conservation, economics, education, engineering, entertainment/recreation, ethnic heritage, exploration/settlement, health/medicine, industry, invention, landscape architecture, law, literature, maritime history, military, performing arts, philosophy, politics/government, religion, science, social history, transportation, and other.<sup>40</sup> A chart with all areas of significance and their corresponding definitions is included in Appendix C.

- Period of Significance: The period or periods included in the National Park Service's NPGallery metadata corresponding to each listing was noted as the period of significance for the database. When metadata was not available for a listing, the period of significance was taken directly from the nomination form, and translated into compatible date ranges based on metadata categories. This practice allowed all periods of significance to be uniform from listing to listing in order to report date ranges that were most significant for properties on the National Register.
- Category of Property: As defined in Chapter 1, possible property categories are buildings, districts, sites, structures, and objects.
- Historic and Current Functions: Historic and current functions are included on nomination forms starting in the late 1980s. They may fall under the following categories: domestic, commerce/trade, social, government, education, religion, funerary, recreation and culture, agriculture/subsistence, industry/processing/extraction, health care, defense, landscape, transportation, work in progress, unknown, vacant/not in use, and other.<sup>41</sup> A full chart of categories, subcategories, and definitions of each function or use can be found in Appendix D.

- Preparer: Anyone can prepare a nomination form to add a property to the National Register. For the purposes of this investigation, all listings were evaluated to find out who prepared the nomination. All of the preparers were sorted into one of the following five categories:

“Consultant/Historian/SHPO,” “Owner,” “Owner with Help,” “Other,” and “Unknown.” The “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” category included any professional preparing a National Register nomination within the capacity of a historian, consultant, or with an association with the State Historic Preservation Office; this was sometimes denoted as the South Carolina Department of Archives and History. The “Owner” category included preparers who had the same address as the property in question, or were clearly denoted as the property owner. If an owner was one of a group who prepared a nomination form, then it was sorted under the “Owner with Help” category. Any other individual who prepared a nomination form that did not fall into the three previously mentioned categories fell into the “Other” category. Archeologists and students were two types of preparers that fell into this category. Some National Register listings did not have preparer data available because an abbreviated nomination form was posted instead of the original, or there was no listing available at all through the National Park Service or the South Carolina Department of Archives and History; these nomination forms fell into the “Unknown” category.

To gather all of the above information needed for each listing, this investigation required the resources available through the National Park Service’s NPGallery Digital Asset Search and the South Carolina Department of Archives and History’s South Carolina Historic Properties Record. In addition to the literature reviewed in Chapter 2, these two sources served a purely referential purpose to provide access to necessary database information collected. Using the reference number associated with each National Register listing as a search term, the NPGallery Digital Asset Search provided metadata associated with each listing.<sup>42</sup> Metadata items relevant to this study were: applicable criteria, architectural styles, areas of significance, periods of significance, resource type, and date published. Applicable criteria refer to National Register Criteria A, B, C, and D. Architectural styles correspond with the architectural classification, while the resource type indicates whether the listed item is a building, district, site, structure, or object. The date published should match the listing date from the Microsoft Excel spreadsheet described earlier.

While National Park Service metadata provided easy access to the majority of categories for this study, it was still necessary to utilize the South Carolina Historic Properties Record. Searching through the state National Register listings using the historic name as a search term provided a brief narrative description and photos of each listing, as well as a digital copy of the nomination form available for download.<sup>43</sup> Nomination forms include information on historic and current functions if present, property owner, and preparer. In the event a National Register listing was too recent and unavailable through the National Park Service's website, all evaluation categories had to be taken from the National Register nomination form through the South Carolina Historic Properties Record.

All of the information gathered through National Park Service metadata and nomination forms was compiled into a comprehensive Microsoft Access database. Part of the Microsoft Office Suite, the Access program provides options to easily sort the database by multiple elements, as well as chronologically by National Register listing date. Each column denoted a different element from National Register nominations that was to be collected, and each row represented a different property on the National Register from South Carolina. One by one, each listing was added to the Access database, and the result was a full catalog of the 1,556 National Register listings from South Carolina through December 5, 2017. The full Access database is available in Appendix E.

This database is the touchstone for this study's purpose: a critical evaluation of South Carolina's listings on the National Register of Historic Places. Through organizational and analytical queries, the data was evaluated, and this analysis is presented in the following chapters in a series of charts and graphs depicting what is included on the National Register, as well as illustrating additions over time based on various categories and elements included in nomination forms. By analyzing a snapshot of what is included on the National Register to date as well as additions over time, patterns arose indicating whether or not it meets its goal of being a comprehensive list of buildings, structures, sites, and objects that narrate South Carolina's all-encompassing history.

PRESENTATION OF DATA

Following the procedures outlined in the Methodology of Chapter 3, the 1,556 listings from South Carolina on the National Register were reviewed and sorted based on select elements included in each nomination form. This chapter presents the data captured and sorted from South Carolina's listings ahead of an in-depth analysis in Chapter 5 to follow. A comprehensive data table of National Register listings in South Carolina can be found in Appendix E.

The graph below in Figure 1 illustrates the number of listings added to the National Register each year from 1966 through 2017 in South Carolina. Each dark blue bar depicts a year, and the light blue shadow represents the cumulative number of listings on the National Register from South Carolina.

As Figure 1 shows, there is a small bump early in additions to the National Register in the early 1970s, where over 40 new listings were added annually between 1970 and 1974. Additionally, the cumulative number of National Register listings in South Carolina rises each year – with the exception of 1967 and 1968 when there were no new listings – while the number added per year ranges from eight to 98. The highest number of listings added in one year came in 1982, with 98 new listings added to the National Register.<sup>44</sup>

National Register Criteria

Criterion C, pertaining to architectural design or engineering, was selected on nearly 80% of all listings added to the National Register in South Carolina. As the most prevalent National Register Criterion, Criterion C was selected on 1,238 listings, followed by 870 for Criterion A, relating to important events contributing to the broad patterns of the nation’s history; 250 for Criterion B, associated with an

---

<sup>44</sup> The year 1982 had the highest number of new listings added to the National Register in South Carolina with 98. It is unclear exactly what led to such a high spike in South Carolina listings, however such events during that year, including the first published issue of USA Today and the dedication of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, DC, indicate that the nation was reflecting on its past and staying connected to current events on national and international scales. Federal historic tax credits had been established for six years at this point (they were first introduced as part of the Tax Reform Act of 1976), and in the 1980s may have gained lots of traction with many projects in the works to reap the benefits of the credit. Another possibility could be an internal development within the South Carolina Department of Archives and History, perhaps in some personnel changes or reorganization, creating a backlog of National Register nominations that were attended to swiftly in 1982.

influential person of the past; and 140 for Criterion D or information potential.<sup>45</sup>

This shows that all National Register Criteria are represented, but not evenly distributed.

Multiple Criteria can be included on one nomination form. Selection of more than one Criteria at a time indicates that we have come a great distance from the origins of what is considered worthy of listing on the National Register. It illustrates the expanded view with many more possibilities and applications of the Criteria to make a case for National Register listing eligibility. The expanded chart in Figure 3 shows the distributions of Criteria combinations selected for all listings in South Carolina.

As Figure 3 demonstrates, Criterion C is also the most popular Criterion when used in combination with others. The most popular combination consisted of Criteria A and C. Again, this highlights the uneven distribution of National Register Criteria, although they are all represented in South Carolina.

Architectural Classification

Multiple architectural classifications can be included in one nomination form. This was typically used for historic districts, as well as property listings with more than one building or structure included. The distribution of architectural classification categories included in South Carolina listings is illustrated in the chart in Figure 4.

“No Style” was included on 595 listings, and another style not provided in the chart from National Register Bulletin 16 was used 263 times (indicated by “Other”).<sup>46</sup> Within the “Other” category, 133 other styles were listed; “Vernacular” variations were used 27 times. A complete list of all other architectural classifications and styles can be found in Appendix F. There is a clear preference for “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals” and “Late Victorian” properties listed in South Carolina, and many of the “Other” styles included on listings relate to vernacular versions of architectural styles in those major categories.

Each data category for architectural classification had several subcategories that were also included on a number of nomination forms. Within the “Colonial” category, properties were listed as “Georgian,” “Dutch Colonial,” “Postmedieval English,” and “Southern Colonial.”

The most popular “Colonial” subcategory was “Georgian,” selected 42 out of 61 times, which dominated the category more than other subcategories. The other subcategories were only selected once each.

Within the “Early Republic” category, properties were listed as “Federal,” “Adams/Adamesque,” “Roman Revival,” and “Regency.”

Selected 47 times, “Federal” was the most popular “Early Republic” subcategory with a big drop off from the other three subcategories selected.

Within the “Late Victorian” category, properties were listed as “High Victorian Eclectic,” “Queen Anne,” “Italianate,” “Victorian Italianate,” “Romanesque,” “Richardsonian Romanesque,” “Gothic,” “Second Gothic Revival,” “Renaissance,” “Renaissance Revival,” “Second Renaissance Revival,” “Second Empire,” “Stick/Eastlake,” and “Shingle Style.”

The most popular “Late Victorian” subcategory was “Queen Anne,” which was selected 56 times, followed by “Italianate” and “Romanesque.” With more subcategories than other major architectural classification categories, the “Late Victorian” subcategories get more evenly distributed, but they are still not evenly weighted, which would require each subcategory to be selected roughly seven percent of the time.

Within the “Mid-19th Century” category, properties were listed as “Early Romanesque Revival,” “Greek Revival,” “Gothic Revival,” “Octagon Mode,” “Italian Villa,” “Exotic Revival,” “Moorish Revival,” and “Egyptian Revival.”

There is not an even distribution of “Mid-19th Century” architectural classification subcategories, which was dominated by “Greek Revival” and “Gothic Revival.”

Within the “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals” category, properties were listed as “Classical Revival,” “Neo-Classical Revival,” “Colonial Revival,” “Georgian Revival,” “Late Gothic Revival,” “Collegiate Gothic,” “Tudor Revival,” “Jacobean/Jacobethan Revival,” “Elizabethan Revival,” “Beaux Arts,” “Beaux Arts Classicism,” “Mission/Spanish Colonial Revival,” and “Italian Renaissance.”

Figure 9: Chart of “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals” architectural classification subcategories selected in listings from South Carolina

The two most prominent styles within this category were “Classical Revival” and “Colonial Revival.”

Within the “Late 19th and Early 20th Century American Movements” category, which had 8.4% of overall mentions on nomination forms in South Carolina, properties were listed as “Bungalow/Craftsman,” “Commercial Style,” “Skyscraper,” “Prairie School,” and “Chicago.”

Figure 10: Chart of “Late 19th and Early 20th Century American Movements” architectural classification subcategories selected in listings from South Carolina

Just over one third of all “Late 19th and Early 20th Century American Movements” were listed as “Bungalow/Craftsman.”

Within the “Modern Movement” category, one of the least frequently used categories on South Carolina National Register forms, properties were listed as “California Style/Ranch Style,” “Brutalism,” “Moderne,” “Art Moderne,” “International Style,” and “Art Deco.”

This category came the closest to an even distribution out of all architectural classifications, however “Moderne,” “International Style,” and “Art Deco” were selected much more frequently than “California Style/Ranch Style,” “Brutalism,” and “Art Moderne.”

Area of Significance

“Architecture” was the most selected area of significance, and appeared on 76% of all listings. This aligns with the high frequency of Criterion C selection, relating to architectural design. The next most selected area was “Politics/Government,” which was present on just over 13% of all listings, demonstrating a huge drop between the most selected area of significance and the rest of the categories. The chart in Figure 12 shows the distribution of areas of significance on National Register listings in South Carolina in descending order of frequency.

Within the “Archeology” category, there are three possible subcategories: “Prehistoric,” “Historic/Aboriginal,” and “Historic/Non-Aboriginal.” The chart below shows the distribution of the three “Archeology” subcategories.

With three subcategories, an even distribution would be 33.3% for each area of archeological significance. Instead, “Historic/Non-Aboriginal” and “Prehistoric” were selected much more frequently than “Historic/Aboriginal.”

Within the “Ethnic Heritage” category, there are seven possible subcategories: “Black,” “Native American,” “European,” “Asian,” “Hispanic,” “Pacific Islander,” and “Other.” Out of the 137 listings in South Carolina that had “Ethnic Heritage” selected as an area of significance, only three out of seven subcategories were used: “Black,” “Native American,” and “European.”

nominations. This is very disproportional and not evenly distributed within the category.

While at least one area of significance must be included on each nomination form, there is no restriction on including more than one, which was the case on several listings. Areas of significance referenced within the “Other” category were “Local History” and “Society/Customs.”

Period of Significance

Periods of significance follow the date ranges set within the National Park Service’s National Register metadata. Additionally, there is one category for all dates before 1500 that occur after 0 AD, and one category for all dates that fall before 0 BC. The chart in Figure 15 shows the distribution of areas of significance as they fall into those ranges.

On National Register nomination forms, the era or period of significance can be as small as a year or as long as more than a century, however the eras were standardized to easily translate into measurable data. Each nomination form's period of significance could fall into multiple date ranges.

Property Category

Each listing on the National Register is categorized as a building, district, site, structure, or object. Unlike other elements explored earlier, each nomination form can only include one property category. With that caveat, the distribution in the chart in Figure 16 illustrates a large divide between the most and least frequently selected property categories.

Within South Carolina, there are 1,039 buildings; 283 districts; 163 sites; 68 structures; and three objects. This demonstrates an uneven distribution with a distinct preference for buildings.

Historic and Current Functions

Historic and Current Functions were not included on nomination forms until the late 1980s. Therefore, 62% of South Carolina's listings have unknown or unlisted historic and current functions. Listings that include uses can provide information about what present treatments listings on the National Register have undergone, in terms of adaptive reuse, rehabilitation, or preservation. Of the remaining listings that include historic and current functions, the most popular category for both historic and current functions fell under the “Domestic” category, including dwellings, secondary structures, hotels, camps, village sites, and institutional housing. The charts in Figure 17 show the distribution of historic functions on the left, and current functions on the right.

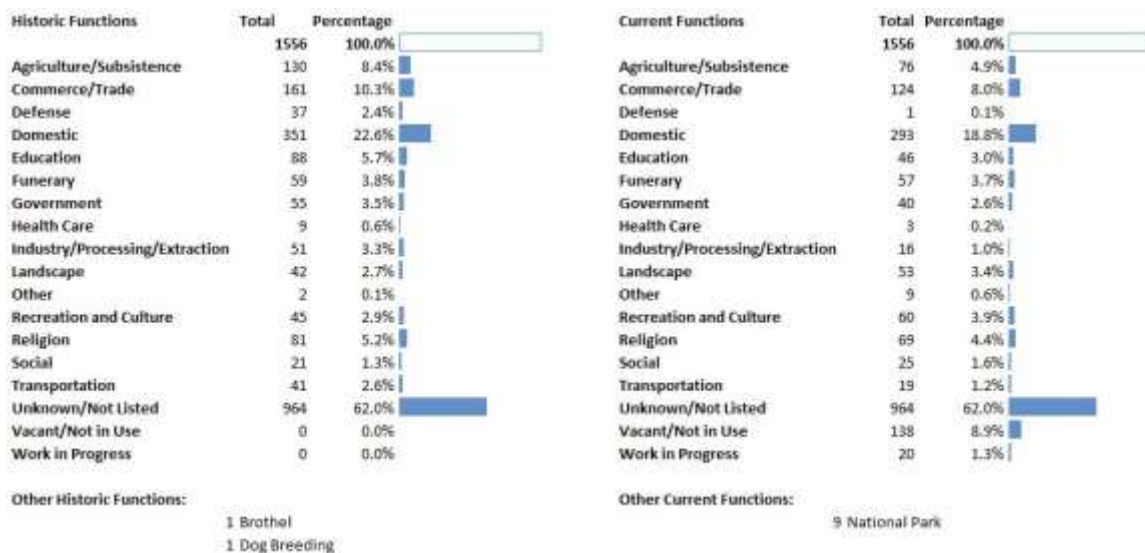

Figure 17: Charts of data categories for historic and current functions selected in listings from South Carolina, including “Other” functions

Similar to architectural classification and area of significance, multiple functions can be included on one nomination form. Within the “Other” category, historic functions included “Dog Breeding” and “Brothel,” and current functions included “National Park” nine times. An early expectation of this investigation was that more mills would be listed with different historic and current functions. Instead, “Industry/Processing/Extraction,” which would incorporate the historic functions for any and all mills, only experiences a 1.3% decrease between historic and current function selection. Functions hold fairly similar percentages between historic and current categories. However, they are different by more than a three percent change in the following categories: “Agriculture/Subsistence,” “Domestic,” “Education,” and “Vacant/Not in Use.”

Preparer

Anyone can nominate a building, district, site, structure, or object to be included on the National Register. In South Carolina, more often than not, a consultant, historian, or staff member within the State Historic Preservation Office completed the nomination form.

Just over four percent of nominations were completed by property owners, with another nearly three percent completed by the property owner with help. This extra help usually came in the form of a staff member from the State Historic Preservation Office, or a true group effort when nominating a district. Nonetheless, this shows that the nomination process is not as accessible as intended.

All of the data presented above for different elements of the National Register nomination form will aid in further analysis in the following chapter.

CHAPTER 5

ANALYSIS

Following the Presentation of Data in Chapter 4, which was collected through this study's Methodology in Chapter 3, a detailed analysis of South Carolina's National Register listings and patterns make it possible to draw conclusions about whether or not the National Register meets its goal of being a comprehensive list of buildings, sites, structures, and objects that represent the full and evolving national experience as seen in South Carolina. All recorded elements of the National Register nomination form were examined individually, and then analyzed further with combinations and layers of data. The layers of data combined are: architectural classification and area of significance, historic and current functions and area of significance, preparer and architectural classification, preparer and area of significance, and preparer and National Register Criteria.

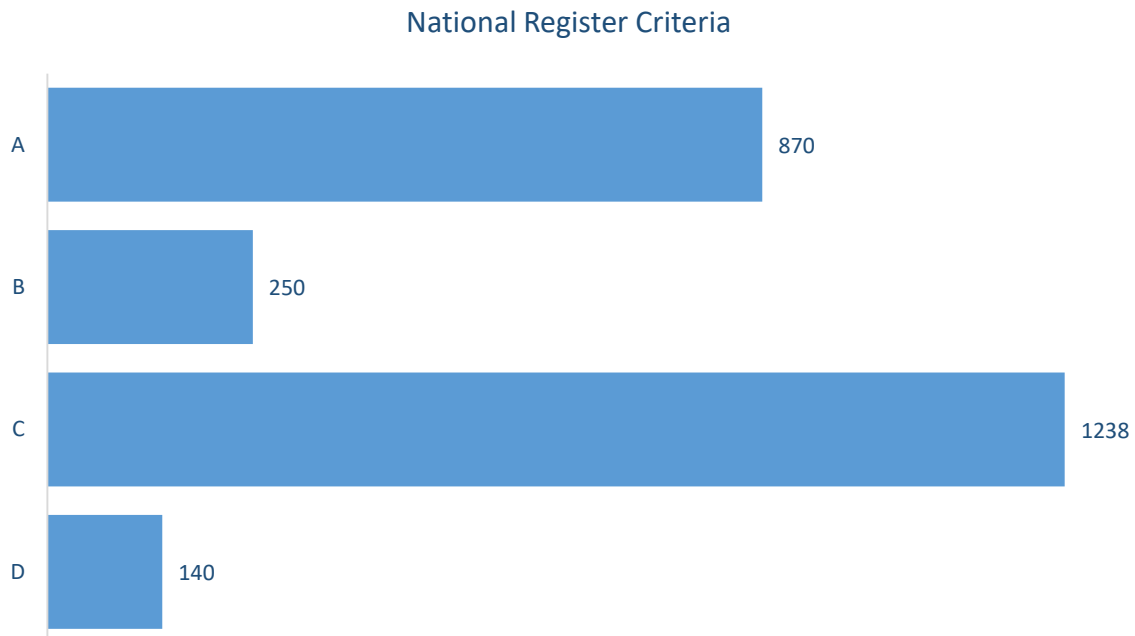

This chapter presents data about elemental patterns cumulatively, over time, and in layers. For clarity of analysis, National Register Criteria, architectural classification, and property category will be discussed first. The National Register Criteria, architectural classification, and property category elements all generally maintain similar distribution patterns. The remaining elements – historic and current functions, area of significance, period of significance, and preparer – do not follow the same distribution patterns as the other individual elements. Following observations and analysis of individual nomination elements, the layering of elements will conclude this chapter.

Part 1 – Individual Elements

National Register Criteria

Out of the four National Register Criteria, Criterion C and Criterion A were the most widely selected. This observation is illustrated in Figure 19 below.

However, each of the four National Register Criteria is not exclusive – more than one can be selected for each nomination. The most frequent combination used was Criteria A and C, which aligns with the two more popular individual Criteria. The graph in Figure 20 shows all Criteria combinations and their frequency.

The National Register Criteria can be selected individually, or in combination with one another (see Figure 20). The Criteria are more frequently paired together (858) than standing alone (697). For a long time Criterion D was applied exclusively to archeological properties and selection of that Criterion barred the selection of others.<sup>47</sup> There was no written rule connected to this observed “policy,” but this practice explains why there are fewer selection combinations that include Criterion D. However, as National Park Service Bureau Historian John Sprinkle, Jr. explains, “in 1969, the National Park Service formally published the criteria . . . that would shape the content and scope of the National Register of Historic Places.”<sup>48</sup> They have remained a hot topic for scrutiny since their inception. They however have remained unchanged.<sup>49</sup>

Throughout the National Register’s history, the Criteria have been represented in South Carolina in fairly stable proportions over time, demonstrating that Criterion C has always dominated. This pattern can be seen in the graph in Figure 21, which shows the National Register Criteria over time overlaid on bars representing the total number of National Register listings per year in South Carolina.

Looking at the trajectory of the Criteria over time, the Criteria meet the same distribution proportions as the totals reflect in most years with some exceptions.

Sometimes Criterion A is selected more than Criterion C (about five years); and sometimes Criterion D is above Criterion B (about nine years). This indicates that the National Register has been fairly consistent over time in regards to the Criteria, although has not maintained an even distribution.

Architectural Classification

All architectural classifications enumerated by the National Register are used in South Carolina; nominations with “Mixed” are the least frequent at six occurrences. “No Style” is selected 595 times. The graph in Figure 22 shows all architectural classification categories in ascending order of use.

While the cumulative results of architectural classification show a preference for “No Style” followed by “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals,” the results over time illustrate a different pattern. Splitting the data into stylistic categories and miscellaneous categories, the following two graphs in Figures 23 and 24 show the trajectory of architectural classifications listed over time overlaid on bars representing the total number of National Register listings per year.

On nominations in any given year, most of the architectural classifications are represented and there are some observable trends over time. “Late Victorian” experienced a heyday in the late 1970s and mid 1980s, denoted by the yellow line in Figure 23. The dark blue line indicates that “Modern Movement” selections increased after 2004, and experienced a surge in 2014. Other categories, especially “Mid 19th Century,” fall away after the 1990s, as seen by the grey line in Figure 23. While being one of the most popular categories overall, “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals” has constantly been in flux with regards to number of selections per year, but the green line in Figure 23 shows that it has been on a steady rise recently.

Also, in recent years, the number of “No Style” selections has decreased. Instead of selecting “No Style” or “Other,” recently more listings have an architectural classification category and/or subcategory denoted on nomination forms. This indicates that preparers are getting away from selecting “No Style” as the default category, and those responsible for preparing nominations are doing their due diligence to denote the appropriate architectural classification(s).

Property Category

All property categories enumerated in the National Register are also included in listings from South Carolina. As indicated in the graph in Figure 25, buildings are most frequently listed at 1,039 times. Objects, only listed three times, are the least frequent property type.

As defined in Chapter 1, the five property categories are as follows:

- Building: primary use is to shelter any form of human activity;
- District: can possess a grouping of a number of category types;
- Site: place that holds significance related to an event, activity, building or structure in the fields of history, culture, and archeology;
- Structure: any constructed entity that is intended for other uses rather than human activity and shelter; and
- Object: relatively small, simply built, and usually artistic.<sup>50</sup>

Over time, at least two of the five categories are listed per year. The graph in Figure 26 shows the distribution of property categories each year from 1966 through 2017.

Property categories are represented in fairly stable proportions, but not in even distributions, just as National Register Criteria and architectural classification elements were explored previously.

Historic and Current Functions

Historic and current functions encompass a limited data set because they were not included on nomination forms consistently until the late 1980s. This accounts for the largest category in both sets of functions denoted as “Unknown/Not Listed.” On the side-by-side graphs in Figure 27, nearly two thirds of all listings are in that category.

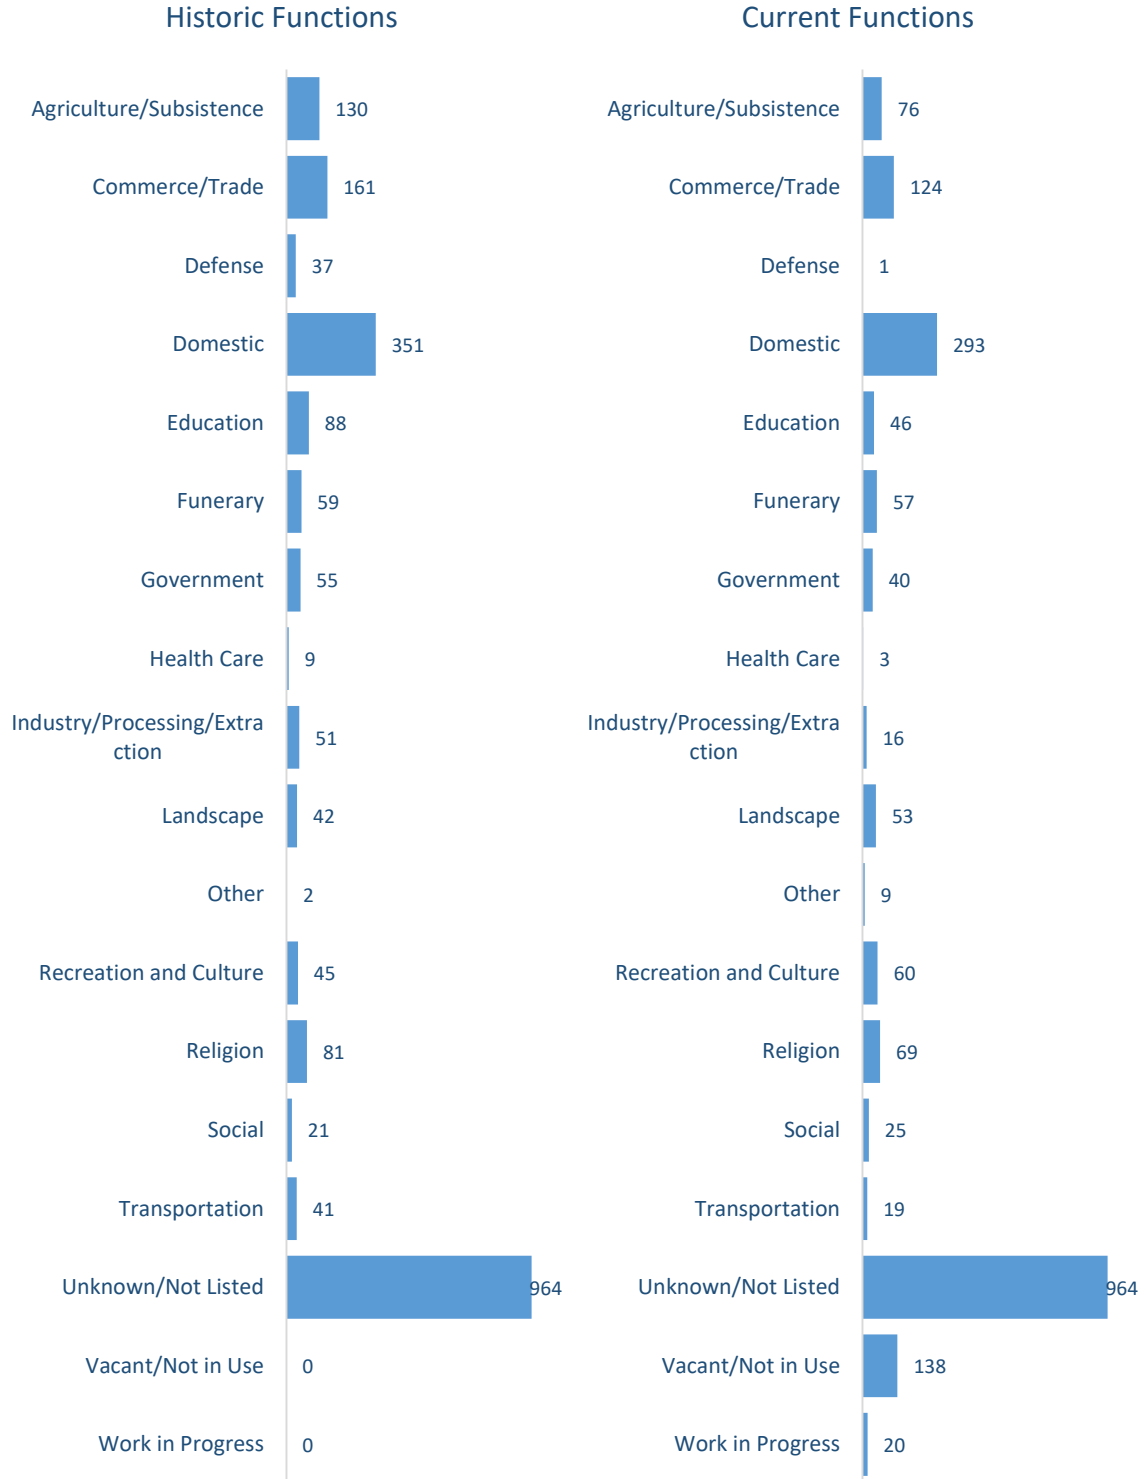

Figure 27: Side-by-side graphs of historic and current functions selected in listings from South Carolina

There is also no distinct difference in pattern evident between historic and current functions. If properties listed were receiving a strict preservation treatment, in contrast to rehabilitation where function changes, then the list of historic and current functions would remain exactly the same.<sup>51</sup> Adaptive reuse has gone through periods of popularity, which can explain some differentiation between the two sets of categories such as “Defense,” “Industry/Processing/Extraction,” and “Transportation.”

Further investigation would be required to determine how much of an impact historic tax credits on the federal and state levels have had on changes in function, as reuse is often associated with tax credits. Starting in 1976, federal historic tax credits have offered benefits and incentives for rehabilitating a historic property that is income-producing. South Carolina initiatives include incentives relating to income-producing historic buildings, owner-occupied historic residences, and mixed-use historic buildings.<sup>52</sup> Based on these tax incentive programs, properties listed on the National Register may reflect current functions and uses

<sup>51</sup> A strict preservation treatment would mean that the only interventions on a historic property would be for “the maintenance and repair of existing historic materials and retention of a property’s form as it has evolved over time.” National Park Service, “Four Approaches to the Treatment of Historic Properties,” Technical Preservation Services, <<https://www.nps.gov/tps/standards/four-treatments.htm>>. Adaptive reuse could lead to a change in function from historic uses to a more appropriate contemporary use for economic gain. For example, an old mill building could be transformed into luxury condominiums or an office building.

that receive benefits, such as “Commerce/Trade,” “Domestic,” “Recreation and Culture,” and “Work in Progress.” However, data about historic and current functions from the graphs in Figure 27 further indicates that tax credits have not overly diluted the National Register.

Changing use over time also demonstrates societal shifts within South Carolina. As the state and nation move into industries based on intellectual property and services instead of tangible goods and manufactured products, a shift in uses away from “Agriculture/Subsistence” and “Industry/Processing/Extraction” does not come as a surprise. At the time of listing for 158 properties that had a current function of “Vacant/Not in Use” or “Work in Progress,” their inclusion on the National Register came at a moment of transition. These transitional properties could be seeking historic tax credits, or providing new functions that are more conducive to the current lifestyles of patrons in the region.

Area of Significance

Observing areas of significance, “Architecture” is the most frequently selected data category with a grand total of 1,182, or 75.9% of all listings in South Carolina. There is a significant drop-off to the remaining areas of significance, which range from “Politics/Government” at 209, down to “Philosophy” at one. Even with the large discrepancy between the most and least frequent areas of significance, every category is used at least once. A complete chart of areas of significance is included in Appendix C, and a graph showing South Carolina’s listings’ distribution of areas of significance is shown in Figure 28.

Data Categories for Area of Significance

As a whole, every category is represented, with “Architecture” listed the most frequently. Then there is a clump of middling categories that are listed between 209 times (“Politics/Government”) and 137 times (“Ethnic Heritage”). Afterwards the frequency of category selection tapers off from 112 times (“Religion”) all the way down to once (“Philosophy”). While the National Park Service publishes thematic studies that call for more listings within certain categories or subjects, South Carolina could benefit from calls for more listings relating to areas of significance such as “Communications,” “Economics,” “Law,” “Science,” “Maritime History,” “Performing Arts,” “Invention,” and “Philosophy.”

It is sometimes years that go by between some areas being listed. The graph in Figure 29 shows the distribution of all 30 areas of significance over time overlaid on bars representing the total number of National Register listings per year.

Three areas of significance that display interesting patterns on the graph in Figure 29 are “Architecture,” “Social History,” and “Archeology.” These three areas of significance are drawn out in the following graph in Figure 30, which omits other areas of significance.

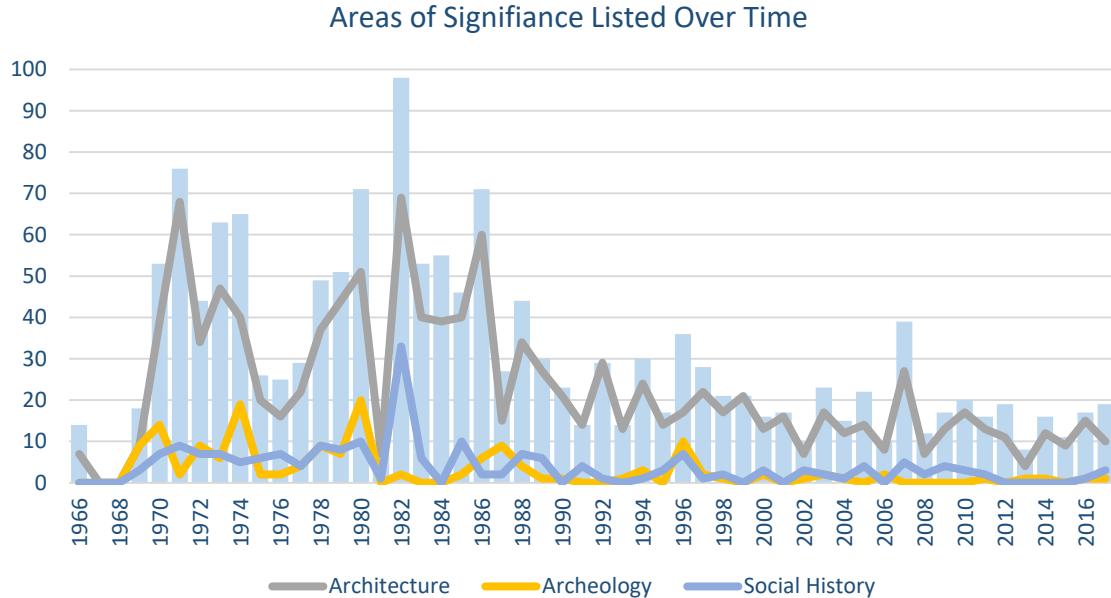

Figure 30: Graph of areas of significance selected over time in South Carolina featuring “Architecture,” “Archeology,” and “Social History”

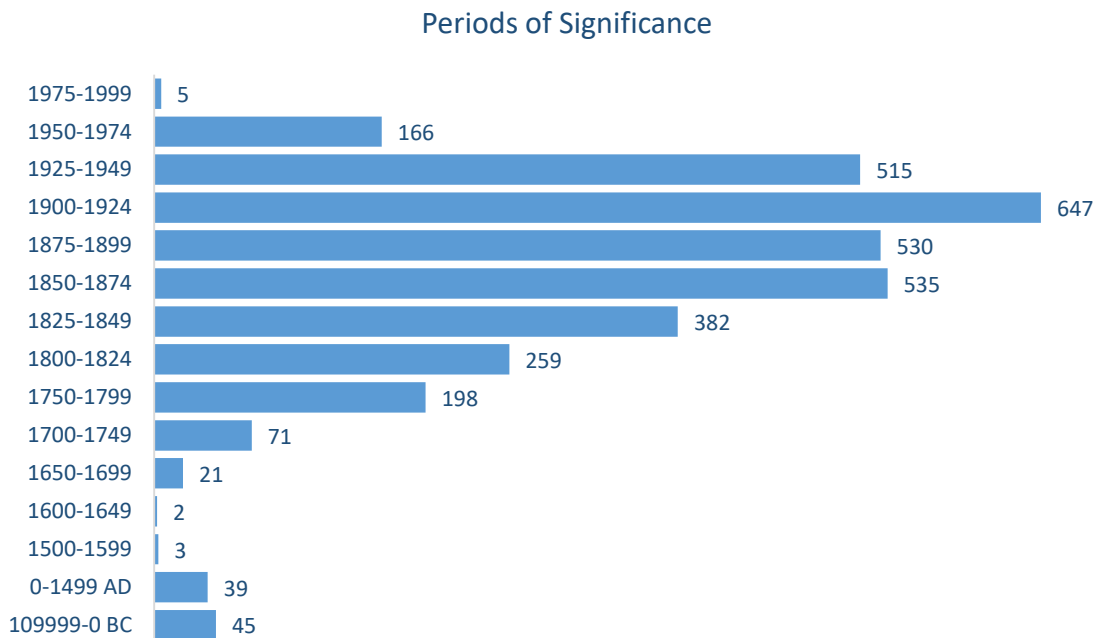

“Architecture” follows a straightforward pattern as the most used overall, as well as each year. The grey line in the graphs representing “Architecture” as an area of significance (see Figures 29 and 30) rises and falls in parallel to the overall number of listings shown as light blue bars in the two graphs. “Social History” demonstrates a spike in selection in 1982, with nearly 34% of listings that year citing it as an area of significance, which was the biggest year of listings added to the National Register in South Carolina. “Archeology” has seen a few spurts of activity around 1974, 1980, and 1996. While “Archeology” and “Social History” have not experienced any selection spikes recently, they have had a continuous presence in most years throughout the entire existence of the National Register.

Making a sound argument for relevant areas of significance for a historic property to be added to the National Register is no easy task. It is not always as visible a connection as architectural classification, with explicit and observable character defining features. It is possible that the areas of significance that are most often used are also the same areas of significance that are easier to make connections to support a National Register designation.

Period of Significance

The distribution of period of significance date ranges recorded on South Carolina’s National Register nominations can be described as a general bell curve, with the time period of 1900-1924 being selected the most often. The following graph in Figure 31 shows the distribution of period of significance.

Each period of significance after 10,9990-0 BC and 0-1499 AD is 100, 50, or 25 years in duration. In a state that highlights its Colonial, Antebellum, and Civil War history, it is curious that the most popular period of significance in South Carolina falls in the early twentieth century (1900-1924). However, there are more selections of a period of significance within the nineteenth century (1,706) than there are total listings in South Carolina (1,556) as well as more than selections of a period of significance in the twentieth century (1,333). To further investigate this pattern, periods of significance were separated and graphed by decade of National Register listing date. The following graphs in Figures 32-37 show the distribution of periods of significance over the 1960s, 1970s, 1980s, 1990s, 2000s, and 2010s.

Periods of Significance Listed in 2010s

Periods of significance vary, with eras from prehistoric to modern times included. From the 1960s onward, the most frequently selected period of significance moved closer to the present day, however earlier periods of significance are also included. Earlier prehistoric periods of significance are present more frequently on National Register nominations listed in the 1970s and 1980s; moving into the twenty-first century in the 2000s and 2010s, the most popular period of significance of 1925-1949 is even more recent.

One factor to consider which affects the distribution of the data is the fact that multiple periods of significance can be selected for the same listing. Another possible reason for this pattern could be the arbitrary date ranges the National Park Service assigns for the purposes of their metadata organization. For example, if a period of significance on a nomination form was 1800-1857, then for the purposes of data gathering and graphing, all of these periods of significance would be counted: 1800-1824, 1825-1849, and 1850-1874.

A driving factor in adding properties to the National Register is the “50 Year Rule.”<sup>53</sup> At the heart of this rule, properties must be at least 50 years old to be eligible for listing, with some exceptions.<sup>54</sup> As the South Carolina data demonstrate, earlier periods of significance were privileged in the first decades of the National Register program than more recent listings. This trend confirms Sprinkle’s observation that “statistically, since the mid-1970s, sites with historical associations within the last two generations have represented about 3 percent of the listings in the National Register of Historic Places.”<sup>55</sup> However, this “old” bias has become less prominent in South Carolina, as more recent periods of significance are being selected on newer National Register listings. Further data collection about periods of significance should include information about the length or duration of each listing’s period of significance. There must be a better way to account for National Register listings and their varying periods of significance – some are as short as a <sup>53</sup> For further explanation, history, and discussion on the “50 Year Rule,” see: John H. Sprinkle, Jr., “‘Of Exceptional Importance’: The Origins of the ‘Fifty-Year Rule’ in Historic Preservation,” The Public Historian 29 (2), 81-103.

<sup>54</sup> If a property is less than 50 years old and is to be listed on the National Register, exceptions are only made for such properties that are “of exceptional importance.” There are exceptions to be considered if a property does not meet one of the four National Register Criteria and basic eligibility requirements, however the exception pertaining to properties achieving significance within the last fifty years is the most well-known. Sprinkle, “‘Of Exceptional Importance.’” year while others stretch over centuries. Additionally, over time older properties have already been nominated and added to the National Register, which leaves newer and more recent properties left to be listed.

Preparer

Those who were responsible for preparing National Register nominations were organized into five groups: “Consultant/Historian/SHPO,” “Unknown,” “Other,” “Owner,” and “Owner with Help.” Preparers within the “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” group include any professional who prepared a nomination while acting as a consultant or historian, or with an affiliation with the State Historic Preservation Office in Columbia, South Carolina. The “Unknown” group is comprised of the 324 nomination forms that did not include a name or affiliation for the preparer. Students, archeologists, family members connected to but not owning the property, or other individuals who have no clear connection to the property fall into the “Other” group. Owners have the same address listed as the property itself, or are clearly delineated as the property owner. The smallest group of preparers is the “Owner with Help” group, which means more than one individual was responsible for compiling the nomination form, and at least one of them was the owner of the property. The graph in Figure 38 illustrates how these five groups split up in preparing all 1,556 nomination forms in South Carolina.

National Register Nomination Preparers

<sup>56</sup> The State Historic Preservation Office provides helpful resources throughout the National Register nomination process, and is instrumental for adding new properties to the National Register. Even in instances when someone else prepares a new National Register nomination, the State Historic Preservation Office may still help the indicated preparer without explicit recognition in the nomination.

The patterns visible from Figures 38 and 39 relating to preparers suggest that the nomination process is not as universally recognized or as widespread an accolade as those within historic preservation circles believe it to be. It may require more specialized knowledge. This may mean that the nomination process is not as easy or accessible for an owner or outsider to accomplish on his or her own, unless they have a background in history or historic preservation. With National Register Bulletins highlighting the nomination process as easy and encouraging that anyone can participate, it appears that in practice it is not as user-friendly as it should be.

Part 2 – Layering Elements of Data

In Part 2, layers of elements present the data on another level to further determine if South Carolina’s contributions to the National Register are truly representative. The layers of data to follow are: architectural classification and area of significance, historic and current functions and area of significance, preparer and architectural classification, preparer and area of significance, and preparer and National Register Criteria.

Architectural Classification and Area of Significance

Separating areas of significance by architectural classification supports the observation that “Architecture” was far and away the most frequently used data category. For all of the major categories of architectural classification, “Architecture” is the top area of significance. The following charts in Figures 40-49 illustrate the full distributions of areas of significance split up by architectural classification.

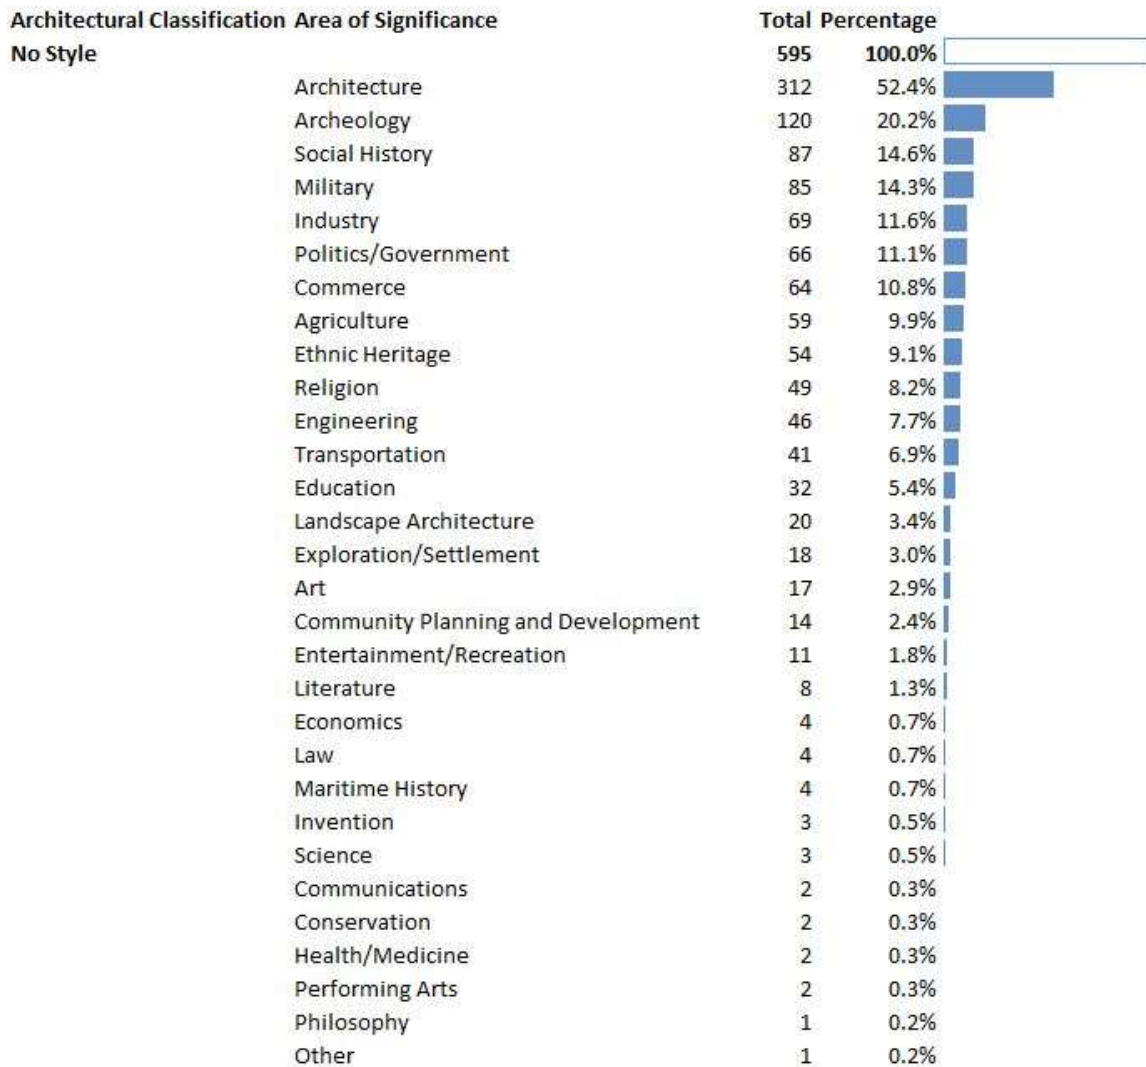

Figure 40: Areas of significance listed on nomination forms with “No Style” selected as an architectural classification

Figure 49: Areas of significance listed on nomination forms with “Mixed” selected as an architectural classification

“Architecture” is always the most cited area of significance regardless of architectural classification. Each architectural classification varies slightly in what are the next most cited areas of significance, but there is always a large drop-off after “Architecture,” and they are not evenly distributed.

Historic and Current Functions and Area of Significance

Layering data for historic and current functions with area of significance revealed twelve overlapping categories included on nomination forms: Agriculture, Commerce, Defense/Military, Education, Government/Politics, Health Care/Medicine, Industry, Landscape/Landscape Architecture, Other, Religion, Social/Social History, and Transportation. The following chart in Figure 50 shows total distributions within these categories for historic function, current function, and area of significance.

National Register Functions and Significance

It is important to keep in mind that area of significance is included on all 1,556 National Register listings while historic and current functions are only included on about one third of all listings. Even so, this graph shows that area of significance for listing on the National Register is not usually related to current function. Categories pertaining to area of significance are more flexible than historic and current functions. While functions are finite, the historical interpretation provides opportunities for more connections based on areas of significance.

Preparer and Architectural Classification

The overall distribution of preparers shifts slightly depending on the architectural classification. Visualizing the data purely in percentages, the “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” group always holds the majority. This can be seen in the domination of blue in Figure 51.

In this graph, the total number of each architectural classification is next to the name in parentheses. “Colonial” and “Early Republic” architectural classifications hold similar percentages of preparers, which indicates that these styles may be more valued by professionals.

The percentage of professionals preparing forms fluctuates but always maintains the majority of listings in each category. “Owners” and “Owners with Help” are a minority preparer for every architectural classification, further supporting the observations touched upon earlier in Part 1 about the nomination process. While professionals responsible for preparing nominations are knowledgeable about various architectural classifications and styles for properties in question, that knowledge base is not widespread to owners or others, as indicated by such small percentages of style selections being attributed to the remaining groups of preparers that fall outside of the “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” category.

The “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” group over time in regards to architectural classification follows the same general pattern as the full set of National Register listings. This can be observed through the graph in Figure 52, demonstrating architectural classifications selected over time by the “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” group of preparers.

Figure 52 also shows that the inclination is moving away from selecting “No Style” on nomination forms in recent years, as well as a rise in “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals,” which has gone through spikes of popularity throughout the history of the National Register among professionals in the “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” group.

Observing architectural classification selections by the “Owner” group over time does not provide much insight into owner preferences. The graph in Figure 53 shows architectural classifications selected over time by property owners who prepared national register nominations.

Architectural Classifications Over Time by Owner

While the “Owner” group encompasses such a small subset of the data, the graph shows that the highest spike in selection was for “No Style” in 1997 followed by “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals” in 2005. These two spikes align with the two most popular architectural classifications from the cumulative data set. The “Owner with Help” group presented nearly identical patterns to the findings within the “Owner” group.

Preparer and Area of Significance

While the most frequently selected area of significance for every preparer was “Architecture,” the percentages for “Consultant/Historian/SHPO,” “Owner,” and “Owner with Help” groups vary more drastically from category to category. The following graph in Figure 54 shows the distributions for preparers out of 100% for each area of significance, with the total number of each category in parenthesis next to its name.

Owners – with or without help – never selected “Engineering,” “Health/Medicine,” “Economics,” “Law,” “Science,” “Performing Arts,” “Other,” or “Philosophy.” “Archeology” and “Ethnic Heritage” have some of the lowest percentages of professional preparers in the “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” group. It is essential that preparers seek out those underrepresented areas of significance to remedy this discrepancy. While “Owners” and “Owners with Help” still encompass small percentages within these areas of significance, the “Unknown + Other” group holds higher percentages within those categories. The “Unknown + Other” group includes archeologists, students, and other preparers who may hold more vested interests in those areas of significance.

Preparer and National Register Criteria

Similar to observing areas of significance by preparer, National Register Criteria distributions by preparer do not follow a comprehensive overall pattern. The following graph in Figure 55 illustrates the percentages of preparers by National Register Criteria.

Out of the 870 nomination forms that have Criterion A selected, 61.6% are done by “Consultant/Historian/SHPO,” 4.9% are done by “Owner,” and 3.3% are done by “Owner with Help.” The 250 nomination forms with Criterion B are done by “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” 72.8% of the time, by “Owner” 1.2% of the time, and by “Owner with Help” 3.2% of the time. Criterion C was the most frequently selected Criteria; it was selected 60.5% by “Consultant/Historian/SHPO,” 4.1% by “Owner,” and 2.2% by “Owner with Help.” Out of the 140 nominations that have Criterion D selected, “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” prepared 27.9%, 0.7% were prepared by “Owner,” and 8.6% by “Owner with Help.” The “Unknown + Other” group includes any archeologists who prepared a nomination form, which helps explain why this group holds the highest percentage of Criterion D listings with 62.9%. Preparing forms utilizing Criteria B and D need more knowledge because they do not require such overt and visible connections as Criteria A and C. This could account for the high percentages of professionals and other preparers such as archeologists and other specialists for Criteria B and D.

When observing different preparer groups over time and which Criteria they selected, the professional group of “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” shows consistently low frequency in selecting Criterion D.

Patterns regarding Criteria A, B, and C follow the same general patterns as the total data set, which is no surprise because the “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” group held the majority of nomination forms under their control. There is never a huge spike in Criterion D selection, which fades out over time with Criterion B. The “Consultant/Historian/SHPO” group does not include archeologists or other specialists that have more experience in fields directly related to archeology and information potential of historic sites and cultural resources.

Owners have an interesting late spike in Criteria A and C around the turn of the twenty-first century.

National Register Criteria Over Time by Owner

This may suggest owners’ interests changing over time to have more awareness of historic events relating to their properties, as well as their design and construction, thus making an effort to have them recognized on the National Register.

When owners prepared forms with help, there was a spike in interest in Criterion D in 1996.

National Register Criteria Over Time by Owner with Help

Otherwise, this group of preparers was so small that no other patterns can be discerned from the data.

One outside consideration regarding National Register nomination preparers is that professionals do not always initiate the nomination process. Preservationists are not always the driving force behind deciding to nominate a property to the National Register, even if they are the designated preparer on the nomination form. While professionals prepared the most nomination forms, they may not be the group that suggested a property be listed the most often. The choice to nominate a property to the National Register can come from a very wide variety of individuals and groups. Originators of this process cannot be as easily measured as other categories and elements within the scope of this investigation.

Analyzing all of the data cumulatively, over time, and layered reveals lots of patterns, and can be interpreted in many directions. Cumulative data distributions show that all possible categories in all of the nomination form elements are selected, but in unequal proportions. Over time, some elements show consistent patterns while others appear more chaotic without a clear explanation. Layering elements introduces possible connections, however these connections should be investigated further before drawing finite conclusions. In posing a simple yes or no question – Does the National Register of Historic Places meet its goal of being a comprehensive list of buildings, structures, sites, and objects that narrate our full and evolving national experience as seen in South Carolina with the state-wide listings? – the data and its accompanying analysis provide a complicated answer.

CONCLUSION AND IMPLICATIONS

Analysis of South Carolina's listings on the National Register indicates that the National Register of Historic Places somewhat meets its goal of being a comprehensive list of buildings, structures, sites, and objects that narrate the state's history. While this investigation research was prompted with a yes or no question, the answer found is much more complicated, and can be characterized as both yes and no. More questions arose with further research paths illuminated.

At the most basic level, all data categories for each element of the National Register nomination form examined as a part of this study are represented at least once within the 1,556 listings in South Carolina. While their distributions and frequencies varied, overall every category for various elements was represented and included, suggesting full representation in South Carolina's National Register listings. Full category representation and diversity are present, but not always in equal proportions or distributions.

Representation in this study only pertains to those elements analyzed – National Register Criteria, architectural classification, area of significance, period of significance, property category, historic and current functions, and preparer. There are other elements, such as Criteria Considerations, that were not within the scope of this investigation.<sup>57</sup> Other categories and elements related to the National

<sup>57</sup> Certain kinds of properties are not usually listed on the National Register – religious properties, moved properties, birthplaces, graves, cemeteries,

Register process should be investigated to determine whether representation found in this study carries across all aspects of the National Register.

National Register listings in South Carolina carry broad representation across its 1,556 entries. While elements analyzed within this study have various representation patterns, it is clear that preparers are filling out nominations to the very edges of what is possible. Any and all National Register Criteria, architectural classifications, areas and periods of significance, and historic and current functions that relate to a property are included, and contribute supportive information to each listing. This shows that the given categories for these elements are important, but are there enough categories to choose from?

The “Other” category for many elements acts as a catchall for other styles or areas that are not pre-selected for inclusion such as vernacular architectural styles, and uses and functions including dog parks, brothels, and national parks. The “Other” category for architectural classification was selected 263 times, which was the fourth highest category selected behind “No Style,” “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals,” and “Late Victorian.” With such a high frequency of selection, there may be a category missing that gets put in the “Other” category by default, such as vernacular architectural styles. How or when should a new category be added to those pre-determined by the National Register program?

reconstructed properties, commemorative properties, and properties younger than 50 years old – unless they meet one of the Criteria Considerations. National Park Service, National Register Bulletin 15, 25.

As the overarching administrative body for the National Register of Historic Places, the National Park Service has established a structured process for listing historic properties of local, state, and national significance by working together with State Historic Preservation Offices, who are in charge of submitting nominations for new listings.<sup>58</sup> In analyzing National Register listings, questions arose about the nomination process itself. Throughout the course of the National Register program, the nomination form has changed a number of times to include more information, however the number of sections within the form has remained constant.<sup>59</sup> It appears that the level of information included in nominations has increased over time as the nomination form evolved. Earlier nomination forms average roughly three to four pages each, while more recent nomination packets are considerably longer and include more elaborate and extensive narrative descriptions and details about the property in question. Nevertheless, the style, classification, and description content have remained the same.

The purview of historic preservation and the preservation movement has changed over time, resulting in the need to be self-reflective to move forward and accommodate for such changes. The National Register nomination process lags

<sup>58</sup> State Historic Preservation Offices submit nominations to be added to the National Register, however anyone can prepare and nominate a property to the National Register. For more of an explanation on the nomination process, see Chapter 1.

<sup>59</sup> The two most challenging sections of National Register nominations to prepare are sections 7 and 8, which are designated for architectural description and statement of significance, respectively.

behind these changes within the larger preservation movement. This can be seen through the consistency over time for listing based on Criteria C; “Architecture” as the main area of significance; minimal “Ethnic Heritage” subcategory selections; and only a very recent spike in “Social History” in South Carolina. It is imperative that the National Register nomination process undergoes a similar appraisal to ensure it remains an effective process for creating a repository of buildings, sites, structures, and objects that reflect the full and evolving experiences of the nation’s history, to find supplemental ways to bring in these facets of history.<sup>60</sup>

Furthermore, from the data collected and the manner in which the National Park Service arbitrarily differentiates periods of significance to populate metadata for each listing, the results from this category do not serve well to answer the question at hand about representing the state’s history in terms of periods of time for significance. Periods of significance included years ranging from 10,999 BC through 1999. Periods of significance are not evenly distributed across South Carolina’s listings and do not represent the full state’s history in equal proportions. Despite the flaws in how the metadata is recorded, periods of significance within South Carolina’s listings favor the early- to mid-twentieth century. The distribution within the nineteenth century is more widespread throughout the 1800s than the twentieth century, which heavily favors the period between 1900-1924. This breaks with an initial hypothesis about historical emphasis on the Revolutionary, Antebellum, and Civil War eras being highlighted and prioritized over others. Based on this investigation's data findings, these historic eras are not in the most frequently selected period of significance.

Another indicator that National Register listings in South Carolina are not fully representative is that most forms are not submitted by the property owner. Property owners with and without help only account for 109 – or seven percent – of all nominations in South Carolina. While owners may initiate the nomination process, and outsource the work of preparing to a professional or another third party who is more qualified, that is not possible to quantify within the scope of this investigation. This suggests that the nomination process is daunting and not as accessible or user-friendly to those outside of the history and historic preservation fields. This also shows a lack of diversity of perspective, as those with similar training are completing the majority of nominations.

With the high percentage of professionals who prepare nomination forms, a hypothesis could have been made that the most frequently selected architectural classification would not be “No Style,” and periods of significance would be evenly represented because those educated on architectural history and styles would recognize the important merits attributed to each one. However, the data indicate otherwise, meaning there may be a lack of diversity within the preservation field, where the inclination is to recognize architectural styles that fall into the major classification categories of “No Style,” “Late 19th and 20th Century Revivals,” and “Late Victorian.”

Further investigation is needed to evaluate whether or not the patterns found in South Carolina’s listings reflect national trends, or if there is more variation on a state-by-state basis. To understand what is on the National Register and to determine if it truly represents the full nation’s history, future investigations should look at the full nation. Additional avenues for research include conducting a national analysis of the over 93,000 listings on the entire National Register.<sup>61</sup> The discrepancies between individual state histories may manifest in different distribution patterns. For example, some areas of significance and historic and current functions are not well-represented in South Carolina. One possible reason for underrepresentation for functions such as “Health Care” or “Transportation” is because it is not possible for those data categories to prosper within the context of this state’s historic resources; another state – for example, Massachusetts or California – may have higher representation for those functions. Perhaps some patterns observed in this study would translate to national patterns, while others may differ from state to state.

To build on this study, other research paths could shed light on the proportionality of the National Register. To determine whether or not National Register listings are proportional to the state or nation, it would be required to know the entire stylistic makeup of the whole state or nation, depending on the scope of research. Such an endeavor would complement this investigation; drawing comparisons between representativeness and proportionality could lead to a deeper level of understanding on the effects of the National Register and how it reflects South Carolina or the nation as a whole.

Within the original data set of South Carolina listings, or a larger research scope, it would also be helpful to investigate the influence and success of National Park Service initiatives for thematic listings. As the National Park Service boasts, “since 2011, four new initiatives — the American Latino Heritage Initiative, the Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Initiative, the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Queer (LGBTQ) Heritage Initiative, and the Women’s History Initiative — have been developed with the goal of furthering the representation of diverse stories within the National Historic Landmarks Program and elsewhere within the National Park Service. The initiatives are intended to extend the reach of documentation, listing, and designation of historic places to better reflect the full spectrum of people, events, and experiences that have contributed to building the nation.”<sup>62</sup> With these recent initiatives in mind, a preliminary reflection on this challenge finds that they made no difference in what was added to the National Register in South Carolina. The “Ethnic Heritage” area of significance in South Carolina heavily favors the “Black” subcategory, and has consistently done so over time. The “Asian,” “Hispanic,” “Pacific Islander,” and “Other” subcategories are never selected.

While the goal of these initiatives align with the National Register’s intention of being as fully comprehensive of the nation’s history as possible, there is a disconnect between theme study publication and subsequent National Register listings. The “Social History” area of significance, which might include LGBTQ or women’s history activities, has experienced spikes in popularity, and has been on a slight rise since 2016. More time is necessary to allow for the influence of these newer publications to take hold, and a deeper exploration of all theme studies and initiatives over time should be conducted to determine any possible connections between them and National Register listing patterns. Even if ineffective at motivating new National Register nominations, these thematic studies do show a shift in emphasis and reveal efforts in line with wanting to show the full historical experience and breadth of the nation. They may prove a nimbler way for the National Park Service to emphasize and capture underrepresented segments of history. This study was framed around determining representation within the National Register, however it is also paramount to be sure the National Register is also inclusive with its diversity of listings.

The National Register is important as a touchstone for the nation’s tangible heritage, and has been a constant presence since its inception as part of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966. It seeks to represent the full and evolving national experience, but just as the nation's history is constantly changing and being reinterpreted, so should the repository of buildings, districts, sites, structures, and objects that represent it. Just as history textbooks require revisions and additions to account for changes in interpretation, so too has the scope of preservation interests changed over time and requires revisions and additions to policies and general practices to remain current. It is important to be self-reflective of past and current biases, and how they could have an effect on what is recognized as worthy of preservation. Through adding a diversity of properties that are associated with a growing and evolving history, the National Register of Historic Places will remain the essential resource it is today.

It truly is possible for the National Register to include enough to be comprehensive and touch on all facets of the history of the United States. Moreover, the National Register will remain relevant and comprehensive as long as it continues to grow and expand with the nation's history itself. As more and more properties are added to the National Register, perhaps a different answer – or question – will arise to ensure that it maintains its reputation as an all-encompassing repository of tangible connections to the past.

APPENDIX A: NATIONAL REGISTER CRITERIA

The quality of significance in American history, architecture, archeology, engineering, and culture is present in districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects that possess integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association, and:

- A. That are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history; or
- B. That are associated with the lives of persons significant in our past; or
- C. That embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or that represent the work of a master, or that possess high artistic values, or that represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; or
- D. That have yielded, or may be likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.<sup>63</sup>
