Two Officers Guilty in King Trial

BY MARK LEISER
Of The Grizzly

The long-awaited verdict in the Rodney King civil rights trial in Los Angeles came in on Saturday with a split-decision. Two of the men were found guilty, while two were acquitted on all charges.

Sgt. Stacey C. Koon was found guilty of allowing the incident to take place, and Officer Laurence M. Powell was charged with using excessive force. Officer Theodore J. Briseno and former Officer Timothy E. Wind have been acquitted.

This decision, made by jurors after the testimony of 61 witnesses and 130 exhibits, is almost the direct opposite of the result of last year's Federal trial, where all four officers were found innocent.

Defense attorneys for the guilty officers said that an appeal is likely, but that will not occur for some time. Members of the legal community are happy with the verdict, saying that the split-decision shows that the jury took the time to look at each individual officer and his actions.

Apparently, the appeals for peace by L.A. Mayor Tom Bradley and other members of the community have worked, as no major problems have occurred. After last year's verdict, the streets of Los Angeles were turned into a battle zone by rioters.

Extra police officers are taking longer shifts and the National Guard is ready to take any necessary action in case any emergencies do arise.

U.C. Tutoring Program Benefits Local Students

BY ROBIN LOIACONO
Of The Grizzly

In 1980 a tutorial program began at Ursinus, and it has been existing quietly ever since. The program is set up so that Ursinus students tutor elementary and high school students from the surrounding districts of Perkiomen Valley, Phoenixville, Springford, Methacton, and Pottstown. Students of the College work for eight dollars an hour (ten dollars at home) in subjects ranging from third grade reading to physics, encompassing foreign languages, SAT prep, and all maths and sciences.

The program is beneficial to both College students and the tutees. The tutors are given a chance to earn some extra money, always a help, and the students are given access to "academic assistance...at a very low price..." It is especially a good experience for those students who hope to one day teach. Working one-on-one makes the situation more personal, which is extremely helpful as well.

The program is run by Mr. Charles Fegely, who was a member of the Physics department. After retirement, he decided to try to implement the service, and it has grown from there. He now volunteers his time on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from three-thirty to four-thirty. He is assisted by two students who serve as after-hour contacts. For anyone interested, they can be reached in Studio Cottage at extension 2436.

Yet another service Mr. Fegely has initiated is one he calls the Ursinus College Pre-College project. This is simply a way for area high school students to get a taste of college life. They meet their hosts around noon on Tuesdays, and begin with lunch in Wismer (I said get a taste, didn't I?). Then they are given a tour of the campus. This is not necessarily for students applying to Ursinus; rather, it is a way for students to see "College" for themselves. It is hoped that this program will be received as favorably as the tutoring; if it does no other service, it gives the College a good name in the community. That is an underlying reason for both of these projects; aside from the great benefit to the students involved, they help put Ursinus on the map.

Open Your Minds Ursinus - Give Art A Chance

BY STEVEN PORUBAN
Special to The Grizzly

Some students may consider them to be an eyesore. Others may simply walk past them without giving a second glance. Still others may regard them as masterful works of art that should be both appreciated and cherished.

I am speaking, of course, about the fine sculptures of Lynn Chadwick that dot the landscape of Ursinus's campus. And although the reviews may be mixed as to the beauty of the collection of towering figures, most students should consider themselves very fortunate to have them here in Collegeville. The reasons for holding such an opinion are numerous. And the argument goes beyond the six larger-than-life pieces that are on the campus grounds.

The Berman Museum of Art is proud to hold 136 pieces of Chadwick sculpture in its permanent collection. This is the largest privately owned collection of maquettes and large scale sculpture by the artist in the United States. These sculptures range in size from the 7" Pair of Cloaked Figures III to the massive Three Electras which stand over 7' each. Part of the admiration of such pieces lies simply in their exalted presence at Ursinus. The more that is known about the artist himself, however, the more the distinction for his works should grow.

Lynn Chadwick began his career by producing textile, furniture and architectural designs. His early mobiles were commissioned for the British Industries Fair in 1948. He was later commissioned to make moving and static constructions for the Festival of Britain. He made his first solid sculpture in 1953. His early figures took on a rigid, geometric form, leaving much of their interpretation up to the imagination of the viewer. Since then, Chadwick's work has taken on a more humanistic form, more closely resembling people in natural settings. More recent works have evolved even further, creating a true sense of movement, as exemplified in a series entitled High Wind. These sculptures depict female figures whose hair and clothes flare out as if caught in a heavy gust of wind.

Chadwick is a constructivist. He begins by using wire to shape the figure he wishes to make and then coats the outlined form with bronze. Many of the figures have a matte, dull finish, while others possess shiny bronze faces or breast plates, as illustrated in the Three Electras, located by Corson Hall.

Chadwick is also a very practical artist. He was quoted as saying that "an artist [is] a person who is in contact with humanity generally and is able to act as a sort of connecting link to express to them how they are." The shiny faces, therefore, may be seen as merely that: shiny faces. When asked about the significance of the third leg on many of his figures during his visit to Ursinus in 1990, Chadwick responded that its function was simply to enable the figure to stand upright.

Another individual aspect of Chadwick's style can be seen in his construction process. Unlike many sculptors who create miniature figures before proceeding to a larger scale, Chadwick scales his pieces down. Therefore, there are several sculptures that have begun as enormous endeavors that are part of a series of smaller statuettes.

Lynn Chadwick is an internationally renowned figurative sculptor. His works are displayed in Europe, Canada, South America and in Japan. He has been the recipient of several art awards including winning the International Sculpture Prize at the XXVIII Venice Biennale in 1956 and winning first prize at III Concorso Internazionale del Bronzetto in Padua in 1959. In 1965, Chadwick was elected both a member of the Accademia Nazionale di San Luca in Rome and of the Accademia Fiorentina delle Arti e Disegno in Florence.

In spite of his awards, Chadwick would concur that public opinion of his work has little, if any, impact on his creations. He was noted as saying that in creating something, his only hope lies in that someone will like it enough to purchase it, "for the persons who do buy [his] work are not concerned about how popular it is."

With all this in mind, I invite you to take a second look at Lynn Chadwick's work. Take advantage of the accessibility of the seldom-seen basement storage area which houses many of Chadwick's pieces. When walking around campus, stop for a minute and get close to a Chadwick. You may not be disappointed in what you see and may even walk away feeling enriched in some way.

I would like to thank Nancy Fago, the Berman Museum's collections manager, for both her time and knowledge of the Chadwick collection.

What's Up in Wellness

In the last article we addressed how it is easy to fall into an unhealthy relationship with food, weight and exercise. We also addressed signs that may indicate that there is a problem with these relationships. This week we will address several of the eating disorders that may result, such as anorexia nervosa and bulimia.

Eating disorders may involve extreme behaviors, habits and rituals. People that suffer from these disorders usually have low self esteem, exercise excessively and place themselves on strict diets. In addition, weighing themselves 5 or more times a day, counting every calorie they consume and spitting out food without swallowing it are also habits shared by people with eating disorders.

Two of the major types of eating disorders are anorexia nervosa and bulimia. Anorexia is characterized by the individual starving himself/herself. With bulimia, also known as the binge purge syndrome, the individual gorges himself/herself with great quantities of food. Then bulimics force themselves to purge in some way either by vomiting, using laxatives, or exercising. Many times the individual behaves as both an anorexic and bulimic.

The main symptoms of anorexia are easier to spot than those of bulimia, since the major and most obvious symptom is that of massive weight loss. Other symptoms include dry skin and hair, cold hands and feet, weakness, constipation, insomnia, kidney and bladder infections and menstrual irregularities.

As weight loss continues, anorexics face a number of serious health problems. These problems include irregular heart rate, high blood pressure, diabetes, anemia and malnutrition. In addition, infertility, kidney failure and heart failure can also result in severe cases of anorexia.

People suffering from bulimia are not as easy to detect because their weight usually remains normal, and they can conceal their behavior. People with bulimia have some of the same symptoms as people with anorexia. However, in addition, they also experience sudden weight change, a bloated face, blurred vision, ulcers, stomach cramps and finger callouses. Bulimics, like anorexics face similar health problems as well. Other

Global Perspectives

BY MARK LEISER

International

--Despite pleas by Nelson Mandela, angry young blacks rioted through several cities in South Africa. The riots were in response to the slaying of black leader Chris Hani.

--Prime Minister Yitzhak Robin of Israel has said that if Palestinians agree to resume peace talks, he would lift his ban on negotiating with Palestinians from East Jerusalem. Robin's decision was made after his meeting with Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak.

--Talks between China and Britain are scheduled to resume sometime this week. The talks, dealing with the future of Hong Kong, suggest that a long and bitter impasse may finally be broken.

National

--The White House has proposed that a new "value-added" tax, an indirect form of sales tax, be paid by businesses in an effort to raise money for his health-care reform package.

--President Bill Clinton has asked Congress to spend more money on spy agencies, satellites, and other intelligence activities in the year 1994. This has surprised several law makers because Clinton had promised to slash intelligence spending by $7 billion over the next four years.

--A new clean air bill in California, that has also been adopted by several Northeastern states, has forced the Big 3 (Ford, Chrysler, and General Motors) to discuss the joint building of a new electric car. Although this collaboration seems strange to some, most people feel the cooperation of the three top auto producers in Detroit is the only way a "zero-emission" vehicle can be produced.

--After years of declining drug use among high school students, there are now signs of an increase in the use of cocaine, marijuana, and LSD among teen-agers. Rehabilitation specialists also add that after years of abundant vacancies in their programs, most programs are totally full.

Local

--After weeks of speculation of where he would sign, ex-Eagle Reggie White signed on with the Green bay Packers. The deal is believed to give White $17 million over the next four seasons.

--Philadelphia was in the international limelight this past Wednesday as former Soviet Union President Mikhail Gorbachev spoke at the University of Pennsylvania. Among other things, Gorbachev stressed his views on the futility of armed conflicts, and that America's role as world policeman will soon change.

serious problems bulimics face are dehydration, ruptured stomachs due to the use of laxatives and diuretics and erosion of teeth enamel.

The first step in overcoming these disorders is recognizing the problem as soon as possible; the sooner the better. Although you may not face all these symptoms mentioned, several or even one symptom may indicate that you are heading toward a serious problem.

Once the problem has been recognized, a common approach is counseling aimed at raising self esteem and restoring normal eating habits. In addition there are a number of social supports that can help as well. These include school counselors, friends and family and health professionals. Sometimes it helps to talk to others who have gone through similar problems. For this type of support, support groups are very helpful.

One thing to remember is that it took a long period of time for this poor relationship with food, weight and exercise to develop. Therefore, it takes some time to gain a healthy relationship with these things again. Recovery happens in small steps. Once the initial intervention has been made, it continues to be a long process toward recovery. Be patient yourself and/or with the individual who is experiencing the disorder.

What changes in Reimert should be made to improve security?

Steve Devlin - Senior

Barbed wire fences, guard dogs and shotguns should be used to turn Reimert into a prison like the Quad.

Stephanie Sarnoski - Junior

Students should enter and exit only through the front door and on weekends, all students should be required to show I.D. If properly controlled, we shouldn't have any problems with townies.

Anthony Saravanos - Senior

They need to set the security desk back with the candy machines so that people do not continue to just walk right through. Also, all I.D.'s need to be checked so that unwanted visitors don't just wander in.

Mike Levensgood - Senior

Ursinus I.D.'s should be mandatory, in order to keep townies out. Guests of Ursinus students should be the responsibility of the student.

Amitha Silva - Junior

Prevent drunk people and townies from entering Reimert.

Reed Nichols - Senior

I think everyone should go topless.

Vetzy Rodriguez - Sophomore

I think that they should check the drinks to make sure they are safe.

Dr. Richardson - Psychology

Insufficient data.

Diana Brown - Senior

I think they we should have a more responsible drinking program. If we want to turn someone away from a party that's known to be an irresponsible drinker, security shouldn't give us a problem.

Brent Baldasare - Senior

As my final suggestion to the Roving Reporter - to improve Reimert: I would realign the neutrino balances of equilibrium to parallel metaphysical properties of innate social behavior.

Kirsten Becker - Junior

I think that Ursinus students should change their attitudes. They should be more responsible when they are drinking and attending parties. I think that this would help more than any rules or regulations would.

Dave Soldo - Alumni

Vending machines for condoms and jellies.

Amy Yeakel - Senior

I don't think the solution is to make Reimert so strict, but something has to be done about the fighting.

Chris Chipman - Junior

Have Lou Brunelli be the security guard.

CAMPUS MEMO

BY PRESIDENT P. RICHTER
President of the College

A MESSAGE FROM MRS. URBAN: After the memorial service for Teri Urban, I received a thoughtful and welcome message of gratitude from Teri's mother. With her permission, I share it with the campus community:

"Dear President Richter, I wanted you to know how beautiful we thought the memorial service was for Teri.

"At a time in our lives when our hearts were saddened, we experienced an enormous amount of love and closeness with the Ursinus community. Teri felt it on her first visit there and truly enjoyed her college days.

"Our friends, neighbors and church community are still remarking on the maturity and behavior of the students. Teri would have been proud!

"From the bottom of our hearts, thank you for the beautiful tribute given our daughter and sister."

The note was signed by Carol Urban for her husband, Jerry, and son, David. Just as the College community gathered around the Urban family in their loss, so the family itself, through its thoughtfulness and concern, strengthened all of us as we dealt with Teri's death. I am very grateful to the whole family and know that feeling is shared throughout the campus.

FITNESS WORKOUT DAY: The Wellness Committee sent a letter to inform me that May 3 will be "Great Pennsylvania Workout Day" and urged us to adopt that day on campus as "Fitness Workout Day at Ursinus."

Let's do it. The Wellness Committee will encourage everyone on campus to wear or bring walking shoes or sneakers to the office or class on May 3 and to "perform a fitness workout at sometime during the day." The Committee will try to swell the statewide total of participants by making a count of all Ursinus participants. If you take part, be sure to let the Committee know by calling 2456 between 9:00 a.m. and noon on May 3.

DYNAMIC SPEAKER: Students and faculty members from the Economics and Business Administration Department heard a dynamic speaker on April 17 at the fourth annual Undergraduate's Economics Conference on campus. She was Dr. Emma C. Chappell, chair and chief executive officer of United Bank of Philadelphia. In her talk, Dr. Chappell gave an inspiring account of how and why her small bank opened for business in the last year. It is controlled by African-Americans and aims to serve members of the minority communities of Philadelphia as well as members of the mainstream community. Capital for the bank was raised among community churches and other organizations.

Dr. Chappell is an inspiring example of an African-American woman who has combined a successful banking career (she was a vice-president with Continental Bank before her new venture) with a deep commitment to improving the quality of life of the people in the minority communities of her city.

THE ACADEMIC CULTURE: The correct a typographical error in the April 6 issue, thirteen papers in the field of biology were presented at a recent state-wide student research conference, and two in English studies.

In the Grizzly issue of February 2, 1993, there was a misunderstanding in an article introducing the new sorority, Upsilon Phi Delta. The misunderstanding was concerning the sorority's Alcohol Policy. In the constitution, no where does it state that members of the sorority cannot consume alcohol. The Alcohol Policy only states that the sorority will not provide alcohol at any of its functions. However, it will not be responsible for any member or other individual who has provided alcohol for herself. Upsilon Phi Delta does not want to spend its dues and fundraising money on alcohol for its parties, but it does not prohibit any of its members from spending her own money on alcohol if she wishes. In other words if you want alcohol, you buy it yourself or BYOB! Beer is usually what is provided at parties, and since not everyone likes beer, people end up buying their own alcohol anyway.

Another misunderstanding that will hopefully become clear involves the sorority's charter. In the February issue it was stated that the sorority "risks having its charter revoked if at any future time the members of the sorority break this pledge," or not consuming alcohol. This statement is not true because as just stated, the constitution does not restrict any member from drinking alcohol at any time.

Sorry if we, the members of "U Phi D," have caused you any confusion. We hope that this will clear anyone's misconceptions of the new sorority.

Thank You,
The Sisters of U Phi D

Dear Editor:

When I went to the Mr. Ursinus production this year, I was looking forward to an entertaining evening, and I was heartwarming that the proceeds were going to an invaluable fund. I left the Mr. Ursinus production feeling frustrated, offended, and sad.

These feelings were my reaction to the Master of Ceremonies, Burke Morrison. The remarks he made and the attitude he displayed were shameful. Mr. Morrison littered the evening with degrading comments to women, remarks condoning drinking and drugs, and side comments belittling his candidates. Above all this, he completely disregarded requests made to him earlier from organizers of the event to refrain from swearing, and he mocked the smoke-free state of the lounge by actually lighting up a cigarette and smoking during the act. His actions throughout the evening made both the audience members and the candidates uncomfortable.

The waters were still rippling from the reaction to the Airband M.C. when the splashes from the Mr. Ursinus M. C. were made. The outcome of these two events indicate a strong need for an improved M.C. selection technique. I offer a couple of solutions to begin the brainstorming process: extensive advertisement of the position, followed with brief interviews, or an election process; allocation of activity fee monies to hire a professional entertainer; offering the position to students that are recognized as campus leaders--class officers, club presidents, maybe the Homecoming Queen. I feel that measures of action must be taken in order to uphold the quality of events at Ursinus, and to maintain positive feelings among the members of the Ursinus community.
