and the first time I have seen it. It is a very large tree, about 100 ft. high, with a trunk about 10 ft. in diameter. The bark is smooth and greyish-white. The leaves are large, elliptical, and pointed at the tip. They are arranged in whorls along the branches.
The flowers are small, white, and bell-shaped.
The fruit is a small, round, yellowish-orange berry. The tree is found in the forests of Central America, particularly in the mountainous regions of Costa Rica and Panama. It is a valuable timber tree and is also used for its fruit and medicinal properties.

Purification of the Supralunar atmosphere

After the consecration of the earth, the priest turns his attention to the upper regions. He begins by performing a series of purifications of the atmosphere, starting from the sun and moving upwards through the planets, stars, and the upper regions. He starts with the sun, which is the central point of the universe. He performs a series of ritual purifications of the sun, including offerings of flowers and incense, and recitation of mantras. He then moves on to the planets, performing similar rituals for each one. He starts with the moon, followed by Mars, Venus, Jupiter, Saturn, and finally Mercury. Each planet is purified with offerings and mantras, and the priest also performs a series of austerities and penances while performing these rituals. Finally, he reaches the upper regions, where he performs a series of rituals to purify the atmosphere, including offerings of flowers and incense, and recitation of mantras. These rituals are performed to ensure that the atmosphere is pure and suitable for the performance of the ceremony.

Consecration of the water

The next stage of the ceremony is the consecration of the water. This is done by filling a pot with water and performing a series of ritual purifications. The priest starts by performing a series of offerings and mantras to the sun, followed by the planets and the upper regions. He then performs a series of austerities and penances while performing these rituals. Finally, he reaches the upper regions, where he performs a series of rituals to purify the water, including offerings of flowers and incense, and recitation of mantras. These rituals are performed to ensure that the water is pure and suitable for the performance of the ceremony.

Consecration of the fire

The final stage of the ceremony is the consecration of the fire. This is done by lighting a fire and performing a series of ritual purifications. The priest starts by performing a series of offerings and mantras to the sun, followed by the planets and the upper regions. He then performs a series of austerities and penances while performing these rituals. Finally, he reaches the upper regions, where he performs a series of rituals to purify the fire, including offerings of flowers and incense, and recitation of mantras. These rituals are performed to ensure that the fire is pure and suitable for the performance of the ceremony.

Conclusion

The ceremony of consecration is a complex and intricate process, involving many different stages and rituals. It is performed to ensure that the天地 (Heaven and Earth) are purified and made suitable for the performance of the ceremony. The priest follows a strict set of rules and guidelines throughout the ceremony, and the entire process is supervised by a spiritual leader or guru. The ceremony is considered to be a sacred and important ritual, and it is performed with great reverence and respect.
