Dear Mr. Meredith:

I have been following with interest and anxiety the events surrounding your admission to the University of Mississippi. I greatly admire your courage and resolution. I have never before written a letter to someone I do not know personally, but I thought you might like to know that I and a number of other graduate and undergraduate students here at Stanford University are very much concerned about your future and the evolution of Oxford. It is extremely disappointing that one of the values America has offered to the world -- education for all -- is so abused today.

If sometime in the future after the public gaze has shifted elsewhere you find yourself in need of aid, please feel free to contact me. I wish you luck.

Sincerely yours,

Rhoda Manheim
