

Soviet Photography in America: An Introduction to the New York Public Library's Revolutionary and Post-Revolutionary Slavic, East European and Baltic Collection

The New York Public Library, in addition to its sizable collection of Slavic and Eastern European material, is also home to extraordinary unique collections of revolutionary and post-revolutionary Soviet and Eastern European photographs. I was approached by Susan Smith-Peter (CUNY College of Staten Island), who is familiar with the pre-revolutionary Russian photography holdings at the New York Public Library, to see if I would be willing to provide SEEIR readers with an introduction to the post-revolutionary collections. With the help of a short-term research fellowship from the New York Public Library, I was able to view the entirety of their post-1917 Soviet and East European Photography holdings. The following is a description of some of the more distinctive collections held at the NYPL.

While the post-revolutionary collections are less ornate than the pre-revolutionary tsarist albums, in that much of the material includes photojournalistic images, family photographs, and tourist snapshots, they are of interest to a wide variety of Slavists interested in the history of photography in Russia and Eastern Europe, wartime photography, history of the Russian Revolutions and the history of Poland. In recent years, the majority of these collections have been digitized by the New York Public Library, and though the digital collections allow for keyword searches, it is not always possible to conduct a targeted search of the available images. While some of the larger collections, the Bessie Beatty album in particular, may be familiar to scholars who have worked at the library, many of the smaller collections, including those of forced labor camps in the Siberian forests in the 1930s, are not necessarily well-known or advertised. Similarly, the collections range from documentary footage of World War II to intimate portraits from family albums, and thus hold a range of intended audiences from the wider public to familial descendants.

The Bessie Beatty album titled The Russian Revolution – Events and Personalities: An Album of Photographs (SLV 107) is composed of photographs and postcards, believed to have been compiled together in the 1940s or shortly thereafter. As a journalist, Beatty traveled to Russia in 1917, accompanied by fellow journalists Louis Bryant and John Reed, among other American journalists, where, as one article put it, there was the formation of “a new and great democracy in the making.”<sup>1</sup> The Beatty collection includes images of some of the most prominent personalities of the revolutions, including Mikhail Kalinin, Anatolii Lunacharski, Leon Trotsky and Vladimir Lenin. While the majority of photographs included in the album are of revolutionary activities, speeches, and demonstrations, it also includes portraits, drawings, and images of everyday life in revolutionary Russia. For Beatty, the album, and her journalism generally, was to act as an ambassador of sorts, to convince the American public “of the real significance of the events” in Russia because “the majority of American newspapers have failed to make plain the meaning of the great things that are happening.”<sup>2</sup> While hardly an impartial observer, and perhaps due to this very reason, Beatty successfully captured many significant events of 1917. The collections Otryvki iz dnevnika Krasnogo Petrograda 1918-1920 g.g (SLV 080) and Soviet Russia in its Early Years (SLV 115) also include several images of the revolution and civil war period.

Other sizable holdings include the Col. John L. Bates (Pantuhoff) and Aleksei Lapteff collections. The Bates album (SLV 022), which has yet to be catalogued, is composed of several stunning photographs inside the Kremlin in Moscow, in additions to various monuments, cathedrals, and points of interest in the mid to late 1930s. It also includes images of Bates' grandfather and great-grandfather, Oleg Ivanovich Pantyukhov, the founder of Russian Scouting, and Ivan Ivanovich Pantyukhov, a military doctor and anthropologist.

The Lapteff collection (SLV 070) was given to the library by the executor of the Lapteff Estate, and belonged to Aleksei and his wife Natalie Krukoff-Lapteff.<sup>3</sup> The collection is comprised of letters, family portraits and snapshots, and images of military ceremonies and officers. Notably, the collection includes photographs of the Romanov family, Grigorii Rasputin, and Leo Tolstoy's daughter Aleksandra Tolstoya. Finally, the Lapteff collection is notable for images of the American Relief Administration's famine relief activities in Ufa in the early 1920s.

The collection Gulag prisoners at work, 1936-1937 (SLV 048), was acquired in 1998 and is composed of 26 photographs of the harsh reality of working conditions for inmates housed in Soviet labor camps. The images were likely taken by a convict or guard, but given the subject matter of the images, it is unclear which – though some surnames are listed on the front and back of certain images. Images include prisoners felling forests and gathering wood, their lodgings, and a camp inspection.

One of the more impressive albums in the library's post-revolutionary holdings is an album celebrating children's welfare in the Soviet Union titled Blagosostoianie Detei Sovetskogo Souiza (Children's Welfare in the Soviet Union) (SLV 071) and includes 149 images of children in school summer camps and sports clubs across the Soviet Union. A few of the album pages are included in the digital collections, though other images are absent from the database. The images are accompanied by Russian language written statistics comparing welfare in the Soviet Union to that of the former Tsarist regime. One cited statistic, for example, was that there had only been 285 kindergartens in all of Tsarist Russia, all of which were private, compared with the 17,742 state-owned kindergartens in Russia alone at the time of the albums creation which was in or around 1947 based on the content of the images themselves. It is unclear who the album's intended audience was, but it was likely related to the Russian speaking émigré community in New York in some capacity.

The library also hosts an extensive collection of photographs of Poland and Eastern Europe before, during and after World War II. Poland in Photographs 1939-1944 (SLV 091) was bound by the library in 1946 and contains five volumes; Poland, Pre-war 1939; Poland, German Occupation, 1939; Polish Children All Over the World, Jews in Poland, 1942-1944; Polish Armed Forces of the Polish Government in London, 1942-1944; and the Polish Government in London, Polish Underground, 1942-1944. Much, if not all, of volumes one through three have been digitized by the library and are easily searchable, but the last two volumes require more targeted searches. Given the large number of images in the collection, and its wide scope, the volumes of photographs chart the progression of Nazi occupation in Poland, from the destruction of Warsaw in the initial invasion, to documentation of Nazi war crimes and atrocities during the Holocaust. The collection is particularly notable for its images of Polish children evacuated to the Middle East and India, as well as images of the Polish resistance. The Rudzinzki Family Photographs (SLV 104) collection also contains many images of interwar Poland.

<sup>3</sup> The Lapteff family is able to trace its lineage to princes of the Golden Horde from the 14th century and Aleksei is a descendant of Artic explorer and Vice Admiral Dmitrii Lapteff.

Finally, various collections include several cityscapes, landscapes, pastoral and travel photographs. Views of the City of Voronezh (SLV 151) contains several images of Voronezh from the 1910-1920s to the 1980s, while the decorative 1926 album Lietuvos Keyziai, Kaunas (SLV 114) is devoted to images of Kaunas and the Lithuanian Hill of Crosses.

The variety and scope of the New York Public Library's post-1917 collections make it a valuable asset to historians of photography, but is also a rich resource for scholars from a vast array of academic disciplines from anthropology and sociology to military history and international relations.

Soviet Russia in its early years : A collection of photographs presented to the New York Public Library. New York, 1923. 87 p.: ill., ports.

By Pierre Apraxine: "An album of 150 photographs by various unknown photographers, documenting the early years of the Communist regime: Personalities (Trotsky); historical event (Treaty of Brest-Litovsk); Celebrations and parades; symbolic public events (Demolition of Statue of Alexander II). Also a good series of photogaphs on early efforts for the education and welfare of children and workers. The album ends with a series of 20 large portraits of political figures around 1917 : members of the Provincial Government and leaders of the Socialist Revolutionary Party, General Kornilov, etc..." These photographs were retouched in the negatives as to suggest painting or drawing.

Includes list with titles of the pictures.

Microfilm. New York : New York Public Library, 1991. 1 microfilm reel ; 35 mm. (MN *ZZ-31381) A very important iconographic document. N.B. Pl. 149 is a portrait of S. Freud. Good condition but brittle mounts. Also on positive film in *ZQ-914
