Fairley in Custody

Charged with Manderach Murders

by Michael McCuen

News Editor

Collegeville, Pennsylvania, a town of small proportions and close knit people, has been thrust into the limelight by a most unlikely and unfortunate event.

Shortly after being reported missing by her father, 18-month-old Devon Manderach's body was found by police in a wooded section of Valley Forge park. The baby was found to have two bruises on her head. The cause of death is reported to be strangulation and suffocation.

Devon's mother, Lisa Marie Manderach, also had been reported missing by her husband after she and Devon failed to return home from a shopping excursion. Mr. Manderach contacted all possible stops his wife and daughter may have made before calling the police and declaring them missing.

As the search for Lisa continued, police began scouring the area of Collegeville, particularly the Collegeville shopping center, where the Manderachs were last seen. Devon and her mother had come to the shopping center to look for baby clothes in the brand new children's store, Your Kidz & Mine. Outside the store police noticed Lisa's red firebird sitting in the parking lot.

Soon the search for a suspect centered on the store, with the majority of the focus placed on Caleb Fairley, son of the store owners. Caleb had been working the store when the Manderachs disappeared. Not long after centering suspicion on Fairley, the police placed him in custody. At that time, Lisa Manderach still had not been located.

Upon further inspection of the store, blood was found on the floor, and strips of Lisa's hair were found tangled in a vacuum. Soon a deal was cut between police and Fairley. Fairley released the location of Lisa's body in exchange for no death penalty. Police then found Lisa's corpse a few miles from that of her baby.

The next day authorities released facts about Fairley. Apparently Caleb was into Dungeons and Dragons, and was also obsessed with pornography. Apparently Lisa fit his description of the perfect woman, and when she entered his store he knew she would never leave. Caleb also had a history of sexual offenses, and he may be linked to an unsolved murder committed a few months ago involving a woman whose appearance was similar to that of Lisa Marie Manderach. Fairley is currently awaiting trial for the Manderach murders.

The Myth of Masculinity

by Stacey Stauffer

Special to The Grizzly

The first Ursinus "Arts and Lectures" presentation of the 1995 school year received both nods of approval and sighs of disagreement from students, faculty, and community members.

On Thursday, Sept. 14, Dan Gottlieb, host of WHY-FM's Voices in the Family, interviewed noted psychiatrist and author Frank Pittman.

Pittman's latest book, Man Enough: Fathers, Sons and the Search for Masculinity, was the focus of the interview. Numerous questions that dealt with family relationships were proposed by both Gottlieb and the audience.

Pittman thinks that men are taught at a young age that they must always strive for masculinity. They are shown to keep their emotions under control and to never cry, especially in front of their children. He thinks that this is where the deterioration of the individual begins.

Pittman says that rather than showing sons the images of masculinity, a father needs to help his son "feel like a man...to welcome him into manhood...and let him know he is proud of him." Otherwise, men will feel the need continually to prove their masculinity and will never feel satisfied or relaxed with themselves.

Pittman also explained that one way men define their masculinity is based on sex or even according to "how big their penises are." He says that starting at about age fourteen, boys begin telling false storecognition, care, and approval of him, but that it is not women who men are in love with. Rather, it is their own masculinity that they are in love with.

One topic that came up in the show related to what advice a father should give to his son when he leaves for college. At the conclusion of the program, a student in the audience commented, "There's nothing a father can say to his son before he leaves for college...it is all the things that have led up to that point that count."

The student added he had learned a lot from his father simply because his father had shown human qualities, expressing the idea that it was "okay to show your emotions and to need other people."

Although it may be impossible for all of us, Pittman urged everyone to get to know their mother and father, not only as parents but as friends. He has learned that it is when we feel comfortable talking with them as friends that we make the effort to stay close to them when we move away.

The interview, which was taped for broadcast, is tentatively planned to air on WHY-FM at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, Oct. 4.

ries about their sex lives.

All of them want to appear to be more masculine than the rest of the boys. Pittman says that they are under constant pressure to perform because "men see life as a series of contests, whereas women see life as a series of experiences."

So, just where do women fit into this idea of masculinity? Pittman says they're at the center of it, because it is women who have the power to anoint men with masculinity.

He thinks that women define a man's masculinity through their

INCREASING VANDALISM

In 1994 there were 615 cases of vandalism in Pottstown, which is almost two every day. This year 334 cases have been reported. Vandalism reports range from spray painting and shattered car windows to kids shooting BB guns out of car windows. Businesses are main targets, especially those located in remote areas. Vandalist attacks in the area are random and for the most part are committed by juveniles. Officials have deemed it the "crime of the bored."

FOOD CRISIS IN POTTSTOWN

The outreach center in Pottstown is facing an alarming food shortage that could effect thousands of people in the vicinity. Because of cuts to the Federal Food Subsidy Programs, funding has decreased for WIC and food stamp programs. Need for food has not decreased, and with a shortage expected before the next food shipment in October, a crisis is expected. The Outreach Center, located at 137 Walnut Street, is sponsored by the Cluster of Religious Communities and is managed by volunteers. The center feeds thousands of needy people each month, many of whom are children.

Helping Inmates Read

What is the easiest way to get into a maximum security prison without breaking the law?

Well, all you have to do is attend three simple literacy tutor training sessions.

The Graterford Literacy Project, which is overseen by the Mayor's Commission on Literacy, was implemented at Ursinus during the spring of 1993 after psychology professor, Dr. Eileen England, took one of her classes for a visit to the prison.

While on their trip to the penitentiary, the group was asked by the prison, along with the Philadelphia Lutheran Settlement House, to get involved with the community by volunteering at the prison.

A number of volunteer projects were discussed, but Dr. England and the Psychology Club felt that this venture might be the most worthwhile.

Dr. England says of her experiences at the prison, "It's rewarding in that you are dealing with someone who has had very few breaks and they want to learn. The interesting thing about my student was that he did know how to read and didn't know it. Part of my task with him was to make him realize what he did know and what he didn't."

At Graterford, the project is controlled internally by the prisoners themselves. For a prisoner, it is a great achievement to be able to carry the responsibility of helping peers to become literate. The prisoners are responsible for setting prisoners up with their tutors, as well as keeping the tutors unharmed. They take their tasks very seriously and would do nothing to jeopardize the little freedom and the great respect

"I felt like I was making a big difference and I'm glad that I could help."

they have gained from both their fellow inmates and the outside world.

Applications must be filled out by those who wish to be tutored. These are then reviewed by the leaders of the project. Only prisoners who have a need and are sincere about learning, rather than just wanting to gain access to the outside, are placed on a waiting list. Each student is assigned a literacy level and given workbooks accordingly. Prisoners must sign an agreement to attend weekly sessions for a six-month period.

Since tutor training began at Ursinus three years ago, around 50 members of the Ursinus community including students, faculty, and administrators have been involved. Around 20 have actually taken their skills past the bars of the prison.

The training sessions, which are followed by an orientation at the prison, prepare tutors both to teach and to deal with the prisoners.

"It was a good experience because I really felt like I was helping because 50 percent of the prison population is illiterate, and a majority of those who aren't read at a fourth grade level. I felt like I was making a big difference and I'm glad that I could help. I had a great time," stated senior Darnell Lee.

Tutoring at Graterford requires a great deal of patience. A great deal of patience is required. One must remember that this is a maximum security prison and events such as lock downs and room counts do occur.

Also, these are not small children that are being taught, but rather grown men. Sometimes the first barrier, aside from the illiteracy, that must be overcome is trust. The prisoner has to know that the tutor wants to help and the tutor has to believe that the prisoner wants to learn.

Becoming literate may be the only way to help a prisoner to one day read a street sign for a job interview, complete the GED, or just read a storybook to their child.

What am I gonna do after college?

A Few Tips from Career Services

The 'rents expect you to have a job when you graduate. After four- or was it five?—years in college, they're beginning to talk about all the money they've spent and how they expect you to turn your diploma into a ticket into the job market.

Don't they know how tough job hunting is?

Like, where do you start? How do you decide what to do with what you've learned? How do you write a resume that looks great—even when there's not a lot to put on it? And interviews...man oh man...do you really have to dress up and what if the interviewer asks something like, "Where do you want to be in five years?" or "What do you know about the XYZ company?"

When you were thinking about colleges you probably got a hold of some college catalogues; browsed through a few of the official guides to colleges and universities; maybe even read a couple of those student-written, tell-all college guides that rated things like food quality, dormitory space, and social life on campus.

Now that you're nearing graduation and having to look for your niche in your field, you'll find the same sort of help in choosing what to do after college as you did before college.

For instance, there's a counselor on the Ursinus campus who will teach you what you need to do to find a job. She'll give you special tests if you haven't made up your mind about what you want to do. She can advise you on the types of summer jobs that will make it a little easier to find a job after graduation. She leads workshops and where employers post job openings. Alumni are available to speak to students about their companies or jobs. There's an on-campus interview schedule for students who want to interview with the employers on campus. Plus, Career Services maintains a resume referral service. Once you've put a good resume together, it goes into the office system. When an employer calls looking for someone with your education, your resume is sent to that employer.

Also, the Career Services Office offers a series of books custom-designed for the graduating student or alumni looking for a career and a first job. Those books now available at the office, are the 1995-96 Job Choices Series.

Copies of the Job Choices books are available for SENIORS ONLY from the Career Services Office in Bomberger 121 between the hours of 9 AM and 12 Noon, and 1 PM and 5 PM, Monday thru Friday. They will be distributed at the Senior Orientation meetings held on Monday, Sept. 18; Tuesday, Sept. 19; and Wednesday, Sept. 20 at 12:30 PM and 4:00 PM in Bomberger 120. Seniors should attend one of the six sessions.

If you are looking around for Todd McKinney, Carol Brewer, Mike Fleming, or any of the other Leadership Development / Student Activities Office staffers, and you find only french fries and pizza, perhaps it is time for you to be updated on the changes in both location and practice of the Student Activities Office.

The old SAO office is now home to the newly renovated Zack's, the campus fast food alternative. As the planning of Zack's renovation began, SAO moved to a more casual alternative, the game room. Once orientation started, however, SAO made their final move, to an office near the soda machines in the Wismer basement.

In addition to their change in location, SAO plans to continue through the year with fun projects. They have had much success with their work, including the new student orientation programs in June and August and their current work with Presidnet Strassburger's inauguration.

Student Activities is a very integral part of campus, with SAO representatives attending the meetings of various campus organizations. They are very interested in making the Student Activities Office receptive to the desires to Ursinus students, and they welcome any ideas or suggestions from the student community. So if you are considering a project or want to make a suggestion, just make your voice heard.

Though they are in a different location, Student Activities is as dedicated as they ever were to making our lives on campus fun and enjoyable through SAO sponsored activities.

U.S. Calls For Peace

Of The Grizzly

Last week, the United States urged Bosnian Croats and Moslems to halt a military offensive against Serbs in central Bosnia.

Meanwhile, Washington expressed satisfaction with the NATO bombing of Bosnian Serb military targets, despite frustration at the Serb refusal to bow to U.N. demands.

Moslem and Croat forces claimed major gains in a fierce offensive across central and western Bosnia. They said they had captured key towns including Donji, Vakuf, and Jajce.

"The United States has repeatedly urged all parties in the region, at the highest level, not to take actions which could aggravate the situation in the Balkans. We believe that a negotiated settlement is the only possible outcome to this very tragic conflict," said a government official.

Washington also called for restraint by Croatia when its forces were poised to overrun the Serb enclave of Krajina last month. When they successfully captured it, the United States hailed the move as having opened the way to peace.

A Major Problem

"So, how do you like it here?"

"Well, it's fine so far, but I feel like I'm drowning in homework already."

"What's your major?"

"Bio/Pre-Med. How about you?"

"English."

Even amidst the blaring music or around the beer funnel, one of the most popular questions at Ursinus is "So, what is your major?". There are many times when we are confronted with this question and don't know how to answer it or if we should say anything at all. Many students fear what others will think when they mention their major.

Sometimes it appears as though many science majors smirk at the nonscience majors who do not have labs three times a week and consider them foolish for studying a subject that will never help them find a job. Many nonscience majors feel that science majors are psycho for choosing courses that almost guarantee seclusion for four years with dead animals and a periodic table. Within the confines of Olin and Pfahler, there appears to be a battle between majors.

While Ursinus attracts many students to our competitive premedical program, other equally important majors seem to fall into the shadow of the science majors. Many people fail to recognize the existence of other majors or consider them insignificant compared to their own majors.

One reason is a lack of respect. Many science majors do not give enough respect to students in other majors because they feel that the workload for other majors is not comparable to the demanding workload of a science major. Many of the nonscience majors feel this lack of respect and feel that they do not get enough attention from the college community.

Every student at Ursinus deserves respect no matter what their majors are. Although some courses are considered "killer courses" and others "blow-off courses", each student here has to work hard. It is almost impossible to complete 128 credits worth of classes without having to work hard—in some of them!

While criticizing and comparing difficulty of majors, many people fail to recognize the similarities among all students at Ursinus. Each student is curious and interested in their major and feel that the skills and knowledge they are acquiring are valuable. Regardless of their majors, all students are learning to analyze and developing problem solving skills. Each student is striving toward a common goal to succeed as students and as individuals.

We all have different perceptions of particular majors, but it is important to realize that we share more similarities than differences. English majors don't just read books, and science majors do have a social life. Once we learn to respect our differences and understand our similarities, we will be a more supportive and unified college campus that values the desire for knowledge no matter what the major is.

In Debate: Drinking

Brandy says: Drinking is not preventable

by Brandy McLachlan
Of The Grizzly

To drink or not to drink, that is the question.

Underage drinking on campus is commonplace at Ursinus. As a freshman, I attended my first party here last weekend. I was amazed at the availability and consumption of beer by members of my own class. I know the law states that no one under the age of 21 may drink, so why was security not busting every teenager that was the least bit intoxicated (and there were a lot of them)?

Many people I spoke to could not believe the ease of the rules. Some were even outraged. They thought that everyone who was not of age should be written up. Is that really the answer?

I am not a drinker, not because I feel it is wrong or immoral, but because I just do not like the taste of beer. However, there are others who feel differently. Some of my close friends love to drink and get trashed every weekend. Is that right? Shouldn't they be stopped? No. Underage drinking will occur, whether it is allowed or not. Isn't it better to have it occur here on campus where no one has to drive home and people are among large crowds that can help? Yes.

The biggest argument against underage drinking is the violence that accompanies it. Many teenagers die every year in alcohol related instances, whether it is drinking or driving, or sex offenses due to intoxication. Drinking here on campus, where the parties are continually monitored by security and all rooms are within walking distance, is a way to reduce the violence associated with alcohol. Seriously, everyone will admit that nothing can stop teenagers from drinking. This being the case, drinking on campus is the only safe alternative.

Christy says: Drinking is a matter of life and death

by Christy Kenny
Of The Grizzly

It is certainly not unusual to see students drunk on campus, especially on the weekends. In fact, a sizable percentage of students on campus are intoxicated on the weekends, though the majority of students are under the age of 21.

First and foremost, it is illegal for underage students to consume alcohol. However, the law is only one reason why drinking is dangerous.

Drinking and driving is another one of the most dangerous risks involved in drinking. When intoxicated, drivers become potential murderers. Few of us are lucky enough to say that we have never known someone who was harmed by a drunk driver.

Luckily, drinking and driving does not pose an extreme risk on campus because the majority of Ursinus students live on campus. Personal safety, however, is a major concern when students become intoxicated. After drinking, many individuals become seriously impaired in their judgment. They are unable to clearly see the consequences of their actions, and often do things that they would never consider if they were sober.

Some of these actions can be simply pushed aside, but other actions are irreversible and can cause serious problems to the individual. Without a clear mind, people often do things they regret the next morning. These few moments of happiness are rarely worth the price that is paid.

We all know how dangerous it is to drink, yet it continues to be a problem. Underage drinking will never be eliminated, but it is important to realize the risk that it poses. If you do choose to drink, do so safely and have some sober friends around who can help you out if you need it. Drinking is not just a matter of fun, it is a matter of potential life and death.

Help! Oscar Needs a Home

Opinions Editor

Have you noticed something different about your residence hall lately? I am not talking about the reupholstered lounge entities or the new Ursinus carpeting, but instead I am referring to the missing trash receptacles that used to reside in our halls.

In case you are a new student reading this article, I am referring to an old policy that existed within our residence halls. Prior to this year, every floor was lined with trash receptacles for the disposal of food, room trash and the like.

At first I could not believe my eyes when I walked down my Stauffer II floor. I realized the once nearly compacted trash cans had been replaced with several clumps of leftover pizza boxes and such.

I guess my next logical reaction was to ask why have the policies changed? I have gotten several answers in my search for the truth.

My R.A. informed me that this was the case because of an unfortunate trash incident in another building. Well, that answer was not good enough, so I proceeded over to the physical plant for a more specific reason.

Members of the plant informed me that the removal was the result of a plan to reduce the costs of our Ursinus cleaning services. I guess this is another step toward making students take more of a responsibility for themselves.

Okay, I understand the effort, but so far I have not seen any results

 • Once someone • becomes used to
 • doing something
 • year after year, it is
 • hard to change.

that would make me think this plan is worth the work.

Some would argue that the absence straightens up our halls, but I would have to disagree for the following reasons:

Two weekends ago I was returning from Labor Day festivities with my parents. As we walked into the front of the Quad we were astounded and infuriated at the sight we saw.

Amid the bees and other hungry insects were literally two large mounds of trash, skirting what used to be two tiny trash cans.

I was quite embarrassed. You see, the items in this area would have maintained proper levels had they remained in the building. Even if the pizza box owners would not have folded them properly before disposing of them within the Quad, it still would have looked nicer in the building rather than outside for prospective Ursinus students and parents to see.

First floor students are apparently too lazy to walk to the dumpsters, so they leave their garbage in the nearest trash can. After all, pizza cannot last more than a few days in your room without leaving a particular odor.

Moreover, garbage disposal (e.g., the disposing of food and related items) becomes a problem without in-house trash cans. Residents in many Main Street houses are finding it difficult to cook and clean-up without a receptacle in the kitchen facility.

Another problem with the absence of trash cans is the idea that I now must make four or five trips a week to the dumpster. I understand that at home since it is my trash it is my responsibility to take it out. However, I would like to emphasize the fact that unlike the Quad back doors, my doors on my house are able to be easily unlocked and opened from the outside.

Furthermore, I have a question. Why does Reimert have the opportunity to throw away their trash in style? The Quad pizza parties make just as much a mess as does a typical Reimert party. Okay, almost as much.

Like many students, I love this campus and all it provides; do not get me wrong. At the same time, however, I feel that the cost of my education should be enough to cover the payments of a cleaning service.

Ursinus cannot blame the students for the repercussions that now exist since the removal. Once someone becomes used to doing something year after year it is hard to change. These "clumps" that I have mentioned are definitely a result of this change.

Grant it, as a freshman I thought that the cans made the halls look awfully messy; but now that they have been removed I miss them.

I guess if the policies are not going to change back to those of previous years, then we will have to continue disposing of our own trash accordingly.

Until then, "Oscar the Grouch" remains homeless and another day goes by as Ursinus students resume trash collecting as a second hobby.

The Cave

Hello there! How are ya doin? Everything ok? Great! So what's up? Really, no shit! Sorry, I just wanted to see what small talk looked like in print as opposed to conversation.

Well, welcome back to The Cave. It's been a whole week since last you have visited, and since then I have amassed even more wisdom and knowledge to share with you all.

First, I wanted to say that I'm not trying to intrude on anyone else's column, but I have to make mention of something that happened recently.

What is this big event? I saw a movie. You are probably thinking that if I consider that a big deal, then I really do need to buy fucking clue, right? Well, ok, you're right, but that wasn't my point.

The movie I saw was National Lampoon's Senior Trip. This movie is hilarious. It is also the first realistic movie depiction of life in high school.

Now, you'd think that producers would want to give positive images, but hell, no, not in this puppy. These 12th graders trash everything, get drunk in the back of the school bus, do just about every illegal drug that there is, screw anyone they can get their hands (or other parts on), and just have a hell of a good time.

And the best part: Chong, (from Cheech and Chong) is the school bus driver! How can you beat that.

Also, for every character in the movie, there is a corresponding Ursinus student. Watch it, you will see. (Sorry Colin, but I had to mention this movie, one of them things, ya know) Other than seeing this masterful attempt at cinematic genius, the rest of my week was probably just like yours, so I won't tell you about it.

Which brings me to an interesting question, Why are there interstate highways in Hawaii? (I can't take credit for this one, I saw it on a billboard in Limerick. People there must have a lot of time to think about things like this. That, or the nuclear waste being dumped in the river has finally seeped into the brain.)

Anyway, I sat and pondered this for a while, along with other great philosophical questions, and I have no answer. I do, however, have the meaning of life.

It is that we know nothing, we never will know anything, and it is pretty damn useless to try and figure things out, so why not just spend the rest of our lives having meaningless sex and searching for physical pleasure. Hmm, sounds like a new religion doesn't it.

If there is anyone out there who wants to drop their educational pursuits and follow me and my philosophy, I am accepting applications and blood samples until next Tuesday. After that there will be a charge.

Ya know, I still haven't figured out who the guy with the huge dog is, and why he hangs around Olin so much.

It is a nice dog though. Can you imagine the slobber that comes out of that thing's mouth. It's probably more than a freshman staring at Paisley Beach on a hot, sunny day.

Nah, maybe not!

On that note, when is dessert, President Strassburger? Or should I ask Mrs. Strassburger? I'm curious about whether it will be chocolate cupcakes or tiramisu. Of course, either one is fine by me. You bring the cake, we'll bring the Bacardi 151.

Well, time for me to go sit on a grassy knoll and contemplate why we have toenails. Doesn't make too much sense does it? I mean, the damn things can't pick anything up, they just grow long, yellow, and crusty, and rip holes in your socks.

Who knows, next time I'm at the Almighty's house for tea I'll remember to ask. Till then, I am.....done now.

Summer Movie Review - Part 2

by Colin Tucker

Layout/Design Coordinator

Apollo 13- This movie that describes the ill-fated second mission to the moon was the best movie of the summer. Rather than get bogged down in cheesy character development, director Ron Howard (Backdraft, Cocoon) gives a factual, technical account of what happened, lets the inherent drama of the mission drive the movie, and allows the character traits to come out as the events unfold in the movie. The movie was also very effective because it was very suspenseful. Even though I knew what was going to happen, I was still on the edge of my seat for the last 20 minutes of the movie. Unsurprisingly, Tom Hanks was excellent as Commander Jim Lovell, but I do not think this movie will give him a third consecutive Oscar nomination. However, Ed Harris, as the stoic Mission Control commander Gene Kranz, was the big surprise of this movie and it would be a rip-off if he is not nominated for Best Supporting Actor. If you have not seen this movie yet, I suggest you go now while it is still in the theaters. Rating- 9 (Excellent)

Waterworld- Despite all the bad press about the $175-$200 million cost of the movie, the falling out between Kevin Costner and director Kevin Reynolds, and names like Kevin's Gate and Fishtar, I had to go and see this movie because I after the polar ice caps have melted, and dry land is nowhere in sight. Although the movie does not look as if it cost $200 million, it had a lot of good action and stunts, an interesting plot, and good acting. Costner really wasn't that bad. I had the pleasure of watching this movie in digital sound, which added even more to the movie. Although the plot was similar to the Mad Max movies, and some parts of the film were dragged out a little too much (the movie weighed in at a lengthy 2 1/4 hours), it was still fun to watch. Rating- 7 (Good)

Internet Site of the Week

This week's internet site is actually a pair. Ever wonder whether the FBI, those fans of free speech on the internet, have a WEB presence? Of course they do, the better to conduct investigations like "Operation CyberSnare." Their home page is <http://www.fbi.gov/homepage.htm>. Once you are there, you can find out lots of interesting tidbits--from the "top ten most wanted" to the UNABOMBER's messages to the EFF's latest activities. They claim that they do not really have a division that investigates "X-files." (bummer). So, the other site of the week is the X-files FAQ file. The address is <http://www.voicenet.com/~jkraynak/ak/x-files>. You can move from the homepage to FAQs for Fox or Dana, maintained by the "brigades." And unlike the FBI pages, the X-files pages include soundbytes and lots of pictures. Is it any surprise that the simulation is snazzier than the real thing?

Mark's Summer Concert Review - Part 2

by Mark Leiser

Co-Editor in Chief

Elton John - Making his third appearance in the Philadelphia area in just over two years, Elton John drew big crowds for his two-night stand in Camden in mid-August.

Touring behind his latest release, Made In England, Elton varied his set list to please his wide range of fans. He played his radio hits, such as I'm Still Standing, I Don't Wanna Go On With You Like That, Rocket Man, Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Me, and Philadelphia Freedom.

But in addition to his pop material, he satisfied the die-hards by playing lesser-known tracks including Levon, Someone Saved My Life Tonight, and Tiger Lilly (a track buried on an early album entitled Caribou).

The show concluded with a five-song encore: Saturday Night's Alright For Fighting, Your Song, Pinball Wizard, Funeral For a Friend / Love Lies Bleeding, and The Last Song.

The only thing that disappointed me about the show was the fans actions at the end of the show. Elton came out for his final encore, saying that he and the band decided to end every show on this tour with The Last Song, a touching tribute to people suffering with AIDS (a cause that Elton has become very involved with since admitting his homosexuality several years ago).

Upon hearing this, approximately 200 fans stood up and headed for the parking lots, and it was obvious they weren't doing it just to get a jump on traffic. This extremely insensitive act offended those remaining in their seats, and even caught Elton off-guard.

But he handled it very professionally, politely waiting for those who were departing to leave the arena, then continuing with an emotional rendition of the song. Elton showed his true class, and deserved every second of the four-minute standing ovation he received before being allowed to leave the stage.

Jimmy Buffett - This was by far the most interesting show of the summer. Walking around before the concert was an experience in itself, watching the "Parrotheads" (Buffett-faithful who follow him all around the country) tailgate in the parking lot. Boy, do they know how to have fun!

This show was the first sell-out at the E-Centre all summer, as 25,000 jammed the waterfront. And they got their money's worth from Buffett and his 14-member Coral Reefer Band.

Buffett played for nearly three hours, performing his Caribbean flavored tunes about "aging, Key West street characters, and love affairs gone bad."

Crowd favorites included Cheeseburger In Paradise, Changes In Latitudes, Changes In Attitudes, Fins, Margaritaville, and a cover of Van Morrison's 60's classic, Brown-Eyed Girl.

Almost as fun as the music was watching Buffett himself, a man who truly enjoys what he does. And he must have put on a great show if my brother (who doesn't quite understand the magic of the whole concert experience) was actually moved to dance during the performance!

All in all, the summer concert series of 1995 was one to remember. And a thumbs-up must be given to the folks at the E-Centre for a job well done. It's a world-class facility that drew world-class performers! Here's looking to next summer!

Spotlight: THE REV. SCOTT LANDIS

by Alicia Darby
Managing Editor

Who is the Reverend Scott Landis? What is his job here at Ursinus? Some of us could probably identify him on the street, but most of us do not know anything about him. He is more than just a name that pops up once in a while. He is our campus Chaplain, executive assistant to President Strassburger, and executive secretary to the Board of Directors. In short, he is a very busy man.

The Reverend Landis has been the campus minister for ten years. This is his main job, the one that he was originally hired to do, and his area of expertise. In this position, he acts a "spiritual counselor". His title was changed this year to Chaplain this year to indicate the broadening of his responsibilities on campus. What qualifies one to be a Chaplain? Landis received a B.A. degree from Temple University and has recently earned his Doctor of Ministry degree from the Princeton Theological Seminary. His thesis entailed setting up an educational model which involved the study of change in an organization, which became very helpful in his work on campus.

Prior to his work with President

Strassburger, he served on the committee responsible for selecting our new president. Now, as his executive assistant, he helps with the organization of various events, such as the upcoming inaugural ceremony on Founders' Day.

Through this position, he also participates in a Cultural Task Force. One of the goals of this group is to enhance the educational atmosphere of this campus, possibly by establishing a Common Hour in which students and faculty could meet and discuss various topics. This task force is also concerned with other changes that can be made on campus. One change that has already been made is the relocation of many of the administrative offices on campus. The purpose of these changes was to make it easier for the students to take care of their administrative needs. For example, by combining the offices of Academic and Student Affairs, the deans can be aware of the social aspect of the college.

A change that is still in the works is the installation of an Honor Code. This idea would include having self-governed residence hall (i.e., no R.A.s), and having take-home exams. Some administrators feel that college students are able to handle the responsibility of this code, but the issue is still being discussed.

Another important idea that the Rev. Landis is pursuing is the development of a "campus center". Ideally, this center would build community life on campus and give the students a place to gather and socialize. Landis expressed that most college campuses have a feature that distinguishes it from other schools. Ursinus has many of these features, which we downplay too often.

If you still do not know who the Reverend Scott Landis is, then it's probably time for you to find out. He is an integral part of our school. Many of the changes that have happened here recently are due in part to him. Next time you see him, say "hi". I'm sure he'd be happy to chat, even if it's just for a minute.

Sgt. Grizz... "Nothing But The Bear Facts."

This past weekend, security officers encountered a number of non-registered persons on campus. A few of these individuals came to the attention of the Security Department because they were acting in a disorderly manner. It was also determined that these persons were, in some cases, guests of Ursinus students who had not registered their guests. The following is the Campus Visitor's Policy as outlined in the Student Handbook.

Campus Visitors

Persons not currently enrolled at Ursinus College may visit upon the specific invitation of a person enrolled at the college and according to the following provisions:

1. Visitors are responsible for obeying all college rules and regulations, and are required to comply with directions given by college officials. Visitors must be in the company of their campus host of all times.
2. A visitor's host is responsible for the visitor's behavior.
3. A visitor invited by a person enrolled at the college is not a guest of Ursinus College and the college owes no legal duty to such a person as a guest or invite.
4. A person enrolled at the college may not invite more than five visitors to campus at any one time without the expressed written consent of the Residence Life staff, the duty dean, or a security officer.
5. Each resident student may permit up to two visitors to remain overnight in the resident's college room, with the permission of the roommate and the Resident Assistant or Resident Life Coordinator. Visitors may not remain overnight for more than two nights per month.
6. A college official or Resident Assistant may require a visitor to present proper identification and to register with the Security Office. Visitors may also be required to present proper identification and to register with the Security Office in order to attend certain events or to enter certain buildings.

With your cooperation, Security is able to identify uninvited persons who may cause problems and disruptions to campus life.

Chi Rho Psi to Feed the Homeless

by Denelle Godek
Of The Grizzly

Last week, Chi Rho Psi began their first service project with the most important task: collecting funds. Chi Rho Psi plans to feed homeless people at a Salvation Army shelter for men in Philadelphia in October.

The service project, headed by senior Darnell Lee, Community Advocate, and junior Carl Ewald, Chairman of External Affairs, has collected over $800 in Zack Power from students and over $65 in cash from faculty and staff. These funds will be used to purchase food through Wismer.

Once a date has been picked, the brothers of Chi Rho will assemble the sandwiches and distribute them to men in the shelter in Philadelphia. There is the possibility of the fraternity distributing sandwiches in a shelter in Norristown, depending on how much food the money can buy.

Chi Rho thanks everyone for their support and will report back to us how many people were fed through this program.

Labor Day 1995 started a whole new era for Zack's. What used to be a little tiny hang-out was expanded into a food court-style eatery.

Zack's now offers five different stations which each offer a variety of food and drink. It includes Pete's Arena, Grills & Frills, Subversions, Classic Cup and Chills and Thrills.

Pete's Arena serves a variety of Italian fair, including pasta and calzones. However, the most popular item seems to be the pizza, both eat-in and delivery. Pizza can be ordered and paid for with Zack Power by calling x3663.

Burgers, fries, and onion rings are offered at Grills & Frills. Subversions offers a variety of hoagies in two different sizes.

The Classic Cup station houses a variety of coffees, including flavored ones. The ice cream station is the home of hard dip ice cream with a "meal deal" or choose their own meal. Any balance remaining can be paid with either cash or Zack Power.

Additional Zack Power can be purchased in the Food Service office during any meal period. The office is now located in room 103 of Wismer.

Remember, it is extremely important that you have your ID card with you or you will not be able to get into meals. It is just as important to report a lost or stolen ID card so that no one can use your Zack Power. Hope you enjoy the new Zack's!

Concerning the yogurt machine—We seem to have all the kinks worked out with the new machine. It is imperative that when the machine beeps, you let someone on the staff know. This beep means that the machine is out of yogurt, and if it is not filled quickly the yogurt machine will freeze up. Then the wait for yogurt will be a half an hour.

Another point, when the yogurt comes out runny, the only thing that can be done is wait. Unfortunately, there is no machine on the market that can handle outputting that many servings of yogurt in that short a time frame. It will take approximately fifteen minutes to refreeze.

Women 1, Men 0 in the Battle of the Sexes

by Maureen Fitzgerald
Special to The Grizzly

The women scored yet another point in the on-going battle of the sexes. How? This time, the women have gained the lead by their willingness to volunteer their time (and dorm rooms) for a good cause. As the student body knows, the Admissions Office is looking for hosts for its annual Red and Gold program on October 12 & 13. The women of Ursinus have risen to the occasion. But, once again we must ask the question: Where is a good man when you need one? Surely, there are enough on this campus to host the masses of prospective guys who will be flooding Ursinus for the Red and Gold days.

So, if any of you gentlemen out there want to help out not only Ursinus but also your gender as it struggles to prove its superiority to the female sex, you can. Just return the slip you received in your mail boxes asking you to volunteer or stop by Admissions as soon as possible. In addition to the benefits listed above, you'll receive a gift for your efforts. Also, don't forget about that resume you'll need when you must finally go out into the real world; volunteer services score big points with employers and grad schools.

So, now you have enough reasons to be a host for Red and Gold. All you have to do is respond.

Sigma Chi Delta is here!

Last semester, there was a rumor going around about a new Greek organization starting up - Alpha Kappa Delta, or something like that. Well, this semester, the rumor is about to become a fact.

The founding officers (Eric Bohn, Vince Kasper, Heidi McMichael, Ryan Rhodes, and James Toh) are happy to present Ursinus with Sigma Chi Delta, the newest addition to UC Greek life.

The officers of Sigma Chi Delta feel that community service, academics, and a social focus can be combined in one organization! If you feel this is possible too, come to an informative meeting on WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 20 at 9 p.m. in the Unity House.

Members of all classes who are not already members of Greek organizations are welcome.

What's Up In Wellness?

by Kim Ryan
Of The Grizzly

After reading the article about the Wellness Center in last week's Grizzly, I'm sure all of you are dying to find out more about wellness and how you can enhance your own level here at Ursinus. It's very simple, but it's all up to you!

Wellness is a choice - a choice that involves you making an effort to live a life that is socially, intellectually, emotionally, physically and spiritually fulfilling. Okay....so how can this be achieved? Well, you'd probably be surprised to discover the number of activities Ursinus has to offer. The opportunities are there. What are you waiting for? Now is the time to get involved. Now is the time to establish a healthy lifestyle and feel good about yourself. Here are just a few suggestions on ways to improve your overall level of wellness.

Are you ready for a challenge and enjoy meeting new people? Sign up for intramurals! Come join aerobics! The sports being offered this fall are ultimate frisbee, flag football, tennis and indoor volleyball. If interested contact Dr. Borsdorf. (x2456)

Do you have a talent for the Arts? A gift for music? A desire to write? Perhaps the following organizations would be right for you: Ursinus College Choir, Concert Band or Jazz Ensemble. Why not become a staff member of the Grizzly, Lantern or the Ruby?

Perhaps you seek fellowship and wish to share your faith with others; Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA) and/or Intersivity Christian Fellowship have room for you!

Maybe you are unsure where your interests lie or simply want to experience something new. Check out the following organizations on campus: Java Trench (Coffee House), Students and Teachers Against Rape (STAR), Minority Student Union, Hot Shots, and USEAC (environmental club).

NOTE For information concerning any of these organizations or a list of the many others that are being offered, consult the Student Activities Office located in the lower level of Wismer.

As you can see, Ursinus has a great deal to offer...but, the choice is yours. Exercise your mind, exercise your body - go out and meet new people. However, remember to relax and enjoy what you are doing. Wellness can only be achieved through your efforts. COME OUT AND GET INVOLVED!!!

The notorious sculptures here at Ursinus are a regular joke and puzzle to the students.

What exactly are these sculptures used for? What is their purpose? Wait! There's an answer in sight!

I'm sure everyone has seen the newest piece of art outside of Zack's—the LOVE sculpture.

This sculpture is one of the more easily understood pieces of art on campus. But, someone here wanted to make it a little more appealing to Ursinus students.

Brian Hamrick

by Melissa Forbes
Of The Grizzly

What if you went to a college where no one could hear you or understand you?

And what if people couldn't hear you, not because you were quiet, but because you spoke a different language?

Sophomore Brian Hamrick had this experience. He had to learn sign language to speak to his classmates.

Hamrick was officially enrolled in Rochester Institute of Technology (R.I.T.), but lived in the same dorm with students from the National Technological Institute for the Deaf. Students from both schools attended class together.

Hamrick participated in the theatre program at Rochester.

He chose to learn sign language so he could communicate with the other actors, most of whom were deaf.

He chose to leave R.I.T. and transferred to Ursinus, where he made a dramatic change in his major. He chose happiness over money.

Hamrick decided that he wasn't happy being a Bio-Technology major so he switched his major to English. Hamrick's aspiration is to become a poet.

Hamrick participates in many activities at Ursinus. He is a writer for The Grizzly, has a part in proTheatre's The Tempest, and plays the trombone in Ursinus' jazz band.

Hamrick says about his transfer, "At Ursinus, I've finally found the happiness I was looking for."

Tim Sheridan returned an interception 22 yards for a touchdown and Matt Eisenberg ran four yards for another score as Franklin & Marshall (2-1, 1-0) defeated host Ursinus (1-1, 0-1) 14-0 in the Centennial Conference opener for both teams on Sept. 16.

The Diplomats' defense held Ursinus to one yards rushing, intercepted three passes, and sacked Bears' quarterbacks seven times for 55 yards in losses to record the shutout. Ursinus also fumbled once.

The shutout was the Bears' first since the last game of the 1992 season.

One bright spot for Ursinus was junior wide receiver Ron Floyd. Floyd caught six passes for 67 yards. He now has 99 career receptions for 1,608 yards. Floyd tied Joe Czechowicz, '89, for the Ursinus career receiving yardage record. He is nine receptions shy of Czechowicz's record of 108 career receptions.

Mike Kirk's goal with 14:56 to play, off of an assist from John Derderian, gave host Ursinus (2-3, 1-0) a 2-1 win over Franklin & Marshall (3-3, 0-1) in the Centennial Conference opener for both teams.

After a scoreless first half, Ursinus took the lead when Derderian assisted Brian Webster's first goal of the season. The goal came with 2:52 into the second half. The Diplomats' Mike Pitone tied the game with an unassisted goal at the 67:58 mark.

Ursinus outshot F&M 11-9. Both teams had three corner kicks.

Scott King stopped seven shots in goal for the Bears, who won their second straight game.

Get a Kick Out of the Martial Arts Club

by Raja Vaidya

Special to The Grizzly

Have you ever wanted to take martial arts and found out that it cost an arm and a leg just to sign up? Have you ever thought that you didn't have enough time or thought you were too uncoordinated to even try? Well, forget about your alleged limitations because we have a great club here on campus run by one of our own Ursinus students.

The Martial Arts Club was founded in 1993 and began training students last year in the style of Tang Soo Do. As a first year club, its existence was threatened by its initial obscurity, but enthusiastic people appeared eager to learn and helped maintain its presence.

In all, nine students stayed with the club for the course of the year. Six of them had never taken martial arts before in their lives and thoroughly enjoyed their training. Ursinus even helped to provide uniforms, kicking targets, focus mitts, and some sparring equipment.

Five of these new students tested for their next rank and, after an arduous physical test, earned their yellow belts. Of the group, one student, Jeff Kuklinski, was chosen as "best of test."

The martial arts club even had a demo for Airband last year to help advertise the club. The club ended last year with a blast and everyone looked forward to this year.

This year, even bigger plans are being envisioned for the large incoming group. There will be a trip to a tournament for those who wish to compete or just watch. This trip will be open to the campus, so keep your eyes open for flyers.

At the end of the semester both new and returning students will be tested and I will even be testing for my third degree this October. You may ask what the cost is for all this incredible membership. To answer your question, club dues are $20 for the year.

We meet twice a week on Mondays and Wednesdays from 7pm-8pm in the wrestling room. Students who couldn't make both nights last year came to one or the other and still progressed relatively quickly. All it takes is an open mind and hard work.

During the year, expect to be hearing more about the Martial Arts Club. It is a very exciting club to get involved with on campus. If I have sparked your interest and you want to get involved with this exciting and practical club. It's not too late!

A PHILLY FAN

by Joel Schofer

Well, well, here we are, loyal Eagles fans, in the midst of another season and already, by the third game, we've got ourselves a quarterback controversy.

Never in all of my wildest dreams could I have foreseen this happening in such a short period of time. I figured the Eagles would have to go at least 1-3 or 2-4 before Ray Rhodes yanked Randall in favor of Rodney Peete, but I guess this just serves as proof that Ray Rhodes is moving the pieces on the chess board. (Who's controlling what pieces he moves is an entirely different matter.)

I must admit that my initial reaction to the move was one of incredulosity, for I couldn't believe that Cunningham was being pulled after only throwing eight passes, but while I certainly was surprised, I didn't and still don't think it was a bad move.

To put it bluntly, Randall looked bad. Really bad, and even though he had only thrown eight passes, in those eight passes he had done it all.

Let's see. Did he miss a wide open receiver that easily could have coasted into the end zone? Definitely. Fred Barnett could have gotten into the end zone even if he had to wait in one of those Wismer lines to get there.

Well, that might not be too bad. Any quarterback can throw one bad pass in eight, but...

Did he throw a pass to a receiver when it was obvious that he and this receiver weren't on the same offensive page? Yup. Calvin Williams didn't even turn around during his fade pattern to see the ball Cunningham had thrown about 7 yards out, obviously expecting some kind of curl or post pattern from his receiver. Who's fault this is I don't really know, but whether it be William's or Cunningham's, it still happened, and when combined with the blown Barnett pass, certainly makes one hell of a case for Randall's benching.

As the icing on the cake, among all this mayhem did he throw an interception? Oh yes. But it wasn't even an acceptable one, right into double coverage it went, and sealed was Cunningham's coffin.

In strolls Rodney Peete, he of less talent than Cunningham's, but of obviously greater offensive understanding at this point in the season, and...Eagles 21, Cardinals 19. A win, but controversy stirring.

At this point, I don't want to confuse people. I still can't believe that Cunningham was pulled after only eight passes, but as you can see, as I went through what was probably very similar to Rhodes thought process and rationalization, it was probably as bad an eight passes as can be.

Now the question so many people have debated is who the Eagles starting quarterback should be, or better, should have been.

In my opinion, Rodney Peete is the right choice.

At this point in the season, Peete has a better understanding of the offense. He's not as "talented" as Cunningham, but right now Peete's grasp of John Gruden's offense outweighs Cunningham's talent. If you ask me who has a better chance of leading the Eagles to victory against the Chargers, I'll tell you that Peete does and for that reason should be starting, but once Cunningham has enough of a grasp of the offense to let his talent outweigh Peete's, then Cunningham should resume his starting roll for the remainder of the season.

While this sounds all fine and dandy, one must realize that Cunningham may never get to the point where he has a better chance of leading the Eagles to victory. If this never happens, then Peete remains the quarterback.

I just have trouble understanding Rhodes selection of Randall as the starting quarterback. If he felt during the Cardinals game that Peete had a better chance of winning than Cunningham, has Peete done anything since then to change that view? Nope. All he did was win the game.

So, as the Eagles play their third game, I feel it should be Rodney Peete playing quarterback and not Randall Cunningham and I don't know what's going through Ray Rhodes' head, but I guess that's why he's a coach in the NFL and I'm eating in Wismer.

FIELD HOCKEY WINS TWO STRAIGHT

Amy Minnich, Amy Shelley, and Annie O'Connor were successful on penalty strokes in overtime to give Ursinus (3-2) a 3-2 edge in strokes, and a 2-1 overtime win over Lafayette (1-3) on Sept. 16.

Kelly Foster's second goal of the season gave Ursinus a 1-0 lead just three minutes into the game. Selena Trecroce was credited with the assist. That goal stood up until Jenn Durkin scored off of an assist from Zuka Baker with 8:28 to play.

After two scoreless overtime periods the game was settled on the penalty strokes. It looked as though the teams might tie, but O'Connor scored on the final shot of the day to give the Bears' the win.

Lafayette outshot Ursinus 14-12, and held an 18-5 edge in penalty corners. Barb Golley saved eight shots in goal for the Bears, who won their second straight game.

At Bethlehem on Sept. 14, Shelley scored two unassisted goals to lead Ursinus to a 3-1 win at Lehigh. Shelley scored her first goal with less than two minutes to play in the first half. Her second goal gave the Bears a 2-0 lead. After Lehigh cut the margin to 2-1, Foster gave the Bears' some insurance with her first goal of the season. Judie Marcus was credited with the assist.

The Bears fell 3-0 at Delaware on Sept. 12.

VOLLEYBALL TEAM PLACES FIFTH

Ursinus placed at the Lycoming Warrior Classic volleyball tournament. The Bears won one of five matches. Ursinus topped Alfred 15-8 and 15-8 in its third match of the day. Lea Herdman served nine successful points for the Bears, while Chloe Morroni had four kills in the match.

Ursinus dropped matches to Hartwick, 4-15 and 9-15; Lycoming, 15-17 and 0-15; Dickinson, 7-15, 15-4 and 5-15 with the third game being a rally game. The Bears also fell to Susquehanna, 6-15 and 11-15.

Ursinus fell at Allentown, 3-0, on Sept. 12. The Centaurs won the first game, 15-11, despite some strong defensive play from the Bears' Morroni and Lauren Wagman.

Ursinus was no match for Allentown, losing the second game 3-15. The Bears did lead the third game 5-1, before the Centaurs closed out the match with a 15-6 win.

Host Moravian evened its record at 5-5 with a non-conference win over Ursinus (1-6) on Sept. 12. The Greyhounds swept the meet 3-0, by scores of 15-6, 15-5, 15-9. Tracy DiSanto was a bright spot to the eyes of head coach Lisa Cornish. DiSanto had five kills and 16 digs in the losing cause. Amy Bistline sparked the Bears to a 3-0 lead in the third game with solid serving and passing.

CHUCK'S WAGON

There are certain things in life that we have to have. And there are certain things that we don't have to have. We don't have to breathe the cigarette smoke from the Ursinus scumbag team that has apparently moved its homebase from in front of Olin in front of Zack's, but we do have to breathe.

We don't have to like baseball, but for those who do, we do have to have a wild card. The wild card is clearly on par with the necessity to breathe. I mean you shouldn't even have to think about it. Here's why: For any washed up old-timer who said baseball is far too traditional to change the playoffs, division, etc., what they can go do is pound salt or perhaps try to pack some sand because right now, if there was no wild card in major league baseball, there would be one pennant race.

One out of six divisions currently has the leader with less than a five game lead. The Angels have a five game lead, and by the time this prints, the lead will probably be at least 30. Blowout city from all sides.

With the Braves and Indians clinched with almost a month to go in the season, and less than two weeks to go, it is just a matter of time for the Reds, Angels, and Red Sox. The moniker that baseball is a boring, uneventful, slow, anticlimactic procession of sludge is not really being shot down. I'm sure Dusty's mad dash from a couple weekends ago was more exciting than any of these pennant races.

So here's what we have. The NL West is dead even between Colorado and LA. This will be an excellent stretch for these teams because they meet for their final 3 games of the year. ESPN will hopefully show the Sunday night game because that will surely decide who wins the division.

It's a shame that the slimeballs of Corson, known as Residence Life, don't let about 75% of the campus have cable for spectacles like these and Cal Ripken's game or even clear reception for more than 4 VHF channels.

There's a lot of good people coming out of that organization. You can count on that. You can also count 5 teams within 6.5 games of the AL wild card and 4 teams within 5 games in the NL. Usually pennant races are between the first and second place team. Rarely is there a third factor in a division. But here we have 2 spots with 10 teams just a short winning streak away.

The NL race is also tied into the LA-Colorado race because whoever is in 2nd place there is the leader of the wild card race. There's a lot of complex stuff floating around here. I like baseball with or without the wild card. But without question, this realignment and 2 round playoffs is a phenomenal idea.

Last year I picked the AL playoff teams to be the Yankees, White Sox, A's, and Orioles. Um...yes, there's a good chance all will be wrong. If I had to pick one team in the AL wild card right now, it honestly would be the Yankees.

The Mariners lead, but...well, they've never won anything, and now that Ken Griffey is just another player who needs his wrist taped, I like the Yankees. In the NL I had the Braves, Reds, Padres, and Mets. The Braves and Reds are absolutely awesome, and either of those teams will win the World Series. The Padres are done, and the Mets will be good next year. They've been saying that for a couple of years now, so I'm not so sure about that one. They do seriously have about 35 blue chip prospects for 25 spots on the ML, so they must be doing something right. It's definitely not winning baseball games though.

I have to mention that Mike Piazza did a real real bad job this past week. Of course, it didn't happen at the plate where all this guy does is use a golf swing to hit bombs. But he said that he would rather win the batting title than the MVP. Hello Mike, please take off the multi-colored wig and big red nose because you can't be that much of a clown. The MVP 9 times out of 10 means your team wins the division, but I guess that's not important enough to Mike. I don't wanna be like Mike.

Why do people think the Patriots are good? I promise this isn't about the Dolphins who killed the Patsies last week, 20-3.

What do the Patriots have that makes them a powerhouse. Pro Bowl QB? Yes, Drew Bledsoe is the next Marino. Good O-Line? Better than average, okay I'll even give you a good there. But I challenge you to find another group of players on O or D that are even average. You maybe can say the linebackers are average. But no better.

There are a lot better teams in the AFC than the Patriots. They have 6 gimmies in the AFC East, so they'll probably make the playoffs, but remember, a coach doesn't run the plays. The player do. Parcels is great. His team is far from great.

A great job last week by Jerry Rice mouthing off to the press for giving Deion all the credit for San Fran's championship. That's a good job by a team leader. Tim McDonald, or as Jerry said, Tam MucDuneld, Eric Davis, and Mr. Neck Merton Hanks played huge roles. No question. It's just that Jerry Rice is dead wrong when he says Deion wasn't the difference. He doesn't deserve all the credit, but if Deion was any other final 4 team, the Niners would not have won the Super Bowl.

You'll see this year, because all the Cowboys have to do preDeion is go 0.500, because after that, when you check you're watch, you won't see 1:15 or 4:58. You'll see you're watch reading Prime Time.

A gentleman near my equal in wrestling trivia acumen, Mr. Tom Birchler, a frequent trivia question answerer, came up with last week's answer of Canadian Strongman Dino Bravo. The now deceased Bravo pressed over 700 lbs in response to Ted Arcidi's, a real-life powerlifter that supposedly benched 705, arrival into the WWF. So now for the next World Wrestling Federation Trivia Question of the Week: Barry Windham had a very scrawny younger brother who started out pretty good in the WWF, but wound up being relegated to Saturday morning scrub. What was the younger Windham's first name? That's all for this week, and the Pleasure with a capital P, was all yours.
