British Nanny's Sentence Reduced to "Time Served"

by Melinda C. Albert
Of The Grizzly

On February 4, 1997, 19-year-old Louise Woodward called 9-1-1, to report that Matthew Eappen, one of the young children she was babysitting, was having trouble breathing. When paramedics arrived, they found that the baby had a two-and-a-half inch skull fracture, and his eyes were also bulging. After spending five days in a coma, on life support, Matthew Eappen died on February 9.

An autopsy revealed that in addition to his fractured skull, Matthew was also suffering from a month old wrist fracture. The state medical examiner said Matthew hit the floor with the "force equivalent to a fall from a second-story window". The injuries from the fall and the shaking were determined to be the cause of the 8-month-old's death. After Woodward, Matthew's British au pair, admitted to shaking him violently to stop his uncontrollable crying, dropping him on the floor, and tossing him on the bed, the state charged her with second degree murder.

EF Au Pair, the large agency which brought Woodward to America, paid for her high-powered legal team. The defense, Barry Scheck and Harvey Silvergate, confident that their client would be exonerated, sought an "all-or-nothing ruling". This limited the jury to determine that Woodward was guilty of first or second degree murder, or acquit her. However, the defense plans backfired, and the 19-year-old British au pair was convicted of second degree murder, a charge that carries a mandatory life sentence in the state of Massachusetts.

The verdict prompted mixed reactions from the general public. However, according to an ABC News poll, many felt that the jury was too harsh on the young, inexperienced nanny. Faculty and students on Ursinus's campus were also discussing the ruling. Tami Smerlick, a freshman, stated "I believe she is guilty, there are not a whole lot of options of what or who could have caused the baby's death....second degree murder was too tame of a conviction, she should have been convicted of first degree murder, and been given the death penalty."

Although some believed the au pair caused the injuries which led to Matthew Eappen's death, the defense presented two alternative explanations. First, there was the theory that the young Eappen had a genetic disorder or pre-existing medical condition that could have affected his bone strength, causing them to fracture easier than usual. Second, there was the possibility that Matthew's 2-year-old brother, Brendan, the only other person (besides the au pair) at home at that time, could have caused Matthew's injury.

Apparently, the defense was successful in casting enough doubt in the judge's mind. In a surprising and unusual ruling, just one week after the initial ruling, a Massachusetts Superior Court Judge, The Honorable Hiller B. Zobel, reduced Louise Woodward's sentence to manslaughter. He then sentenced her to "time served", meaning that the 279 days which she had already spent in a Massachusetts correctional institute awaiting trial, would be her sentence. The judge stated, "In rendering this decision, I do not denigrate Matthew Eappen's death or his family's grief." Although the judge believed that Woodward handled the baby carelessly, he attributed her actions to "confusion, frustration, immaturity, and some anger, but not malice."

Reverend Rice, Ursinus Chaplain, felt the defense should have sought involuntary manslaughter from the beginning. "I am happy that Woodward's sentence was reduced. I'm not convinced that time served was an appropriate sentence, but I can support it. I think what she has had to endure over the past few months has been lesson enough", stated Rice. He concurred with the judge's belief that Woodward did not have malice in her motivation, nor her thought.

Dr. Kane, a lawyer and Ursinus politics professor, related his opinion from a legal perspective. He felt that procedural justice had been served, since Woodward received a trial by jury, and all appropriate procedures were followed. However, Dr. Kane feels that substantive justice was not served, hence Woodward's ultimate sentence did not correspond with the crime that she was accused of committing. Kane believes that substantive justice could have been served better if the prosecution and the defense were able to debate over what an appropriate sentence would be. Additionally, Kane feels that the judge should have consulted the pre-sentencing report, which gives a professional psychological and sociological background on a criminal, before rendering his decision. The report highlights data, including the likeliness that the person may become a repeat offender. "By not doing these things, the judge has opened himself up to criticism", admitted Dr. Kane.

Some feel that the ruling has delivered a sharp blow to the American justice system. Zenzi Ali, a junior, related "The verdict shows a lack of respect for human life. That woman [Woodward] spent less time in jail than the baby had to live." Amy Canfield, a senior, stated "If you have two choices, to kill a baby or to kill a mother you should kill the baby, because you can get away with it". Marc Clymer, a sophomore, feels "This ruling proves that the judicial system in America is basically corrupt." Ali, Canfield, and Clymer agreed that Woodward should serve a much harsher sentence, though opinions ranged on what the sentence should be. They concurred that this case cast serious doubts on the American legal system.

Despite the court's findings, Woodward has refused to accept guilt or responsibility for Eappen's death. After the judge reduced her conviction, and gave her "time served", Woodward stated, "I would like to maintain what I said in my statement during my previous sentencing. I maintain my innocence." Despite the sentence, the prosecution has vowed to continue to pursue justice for the Eappens. Meanwhile, Woodward has surrendered her passport to authorities, as the appeal process begins.

Lights, Camera, Incest!

by Paul Guidry
Editor-in-Chief

For those of you who went to see a musical depicting a high-brow account of the classic tale by Sophocles with elaborate wardrobes and intelligent lyrics, you no doubt left Ritter disappointed.

As for those of us for whom clairvoyant midwives, incestuous relationships, and idiot psychic children are right up our alleys, "Oedipus, The Musical Comedy" was a pure delight. Adapted from the original by Bob Johnson and Anne Flotsos, this modern-day version unfolds in the quaint, yet somewhat unsanitary town of Thebeville, West Virginia.

In keeping with the plot, Oedipus (Dave Trimmer), abandoned by his parents, Jocasta (Daneen Stamps) and Laius (Brian Berg), is sent off to find his destiny by his father, Polybus (Bryan Shealer), and, as destiny would have it, ultimately kill his father and sleep with his mother. But not before he has several encounters with some of the more interesting inhabitants of the West Virginian hillside, including Tyresius, the mute idiot psychic boy (Rick Bechtel) and his mother (Joanna Doyle), as well as the local psychic (Laura Owens).

With numerous dual roles, including appearances by choreographer Jessica Dunn, this ensemble cast worked tirelessly under the direction of Dr. Joyce Henry. The crew of Melissa Grieco, Joyce Richardson, and Stephanie Palmer, along with light operator Cynthia Skelly, stage manager Annie O'Connor, and house manager Steve Suzuki also worked behind the scenes. The product of their efforts was a hilarious romp through both classic Greek literature and the backwoods of West Virginia.

...AND THE SHOW WENT ON!

by Carolyn Harfman
of The Grizzly

The show did go on. On Wednesday, November 12, 1197 a free Metallica concert occurred in the parking lot of the CoreStates Center. There was a major controversy over whether this concert should occur or not. They won the right to hold the concert on Monday, only two days before the concert was scheduled to occur.

The heavy metal band is promoting their seventh album. The band, who advertises themselves as the loudest rock band, chose Philadelphia for the show after other cities such as New York and Chicago declined. Officials from Comcast-Spectacor, which owns the CoreStates Complex, had backed the show, set the concert date, and rented the parking lot. But after the community and politicians such as Sen. Vincent Fumo threatened to sue, Comcast-Spectacor officials did an about face and tried to break the contract.

Residents of the surrounding neighborhood and some Council members felt that the organizers were not prepared to handle the traffic and crowds that this event would attract. They were afraid the city would not be able to handle the heavy-metal crowd. A Municipal Court judge was stationed nearby to quickly prosecute any fan breaking the law.

Late Monday, November 10, 1997 a three-judge federal appeals panel upheld a Saturday lower-court ruling in favor of the concert. With little time left before the concert Comcast-Spectacor and politicians decided that it would have been worse to cancel the concert after an estimated 30,000 tickets were handed out. City officials said that cleanup and extra security will be paid by Metallica.

After all of this controversy the neighborhood's fear of riots, traffic jams, and loud noise were put to rest. The concert could not even be heard a few blocks away from the Complex. In fact, there was not one major problem. Officials from CoreStates made the band set up the stage facing south towards the Navy yard. I stood across the street from the CoreStates Complex in J.F.K. Park, where normally during concerts inside the spectrum you can sit and hear the concert, I could hear nothing. I had to walk over to the gate right outside the concert to hear.

They put on a spectacular show. There were an estimated 15,000 - 40,000 people there. The concert was covered by MTV, WYSP 94.1, and thousands of other radio stations around the world. They played favorites such as "Killing Time" and "No Remorse" in part of their 90-minute set. Metallica, who is known for the energy they generate live-on-stage, put on one of the best shows I have seen. Their excitement passed on to the crowd, which made for an incredible show. When all was over everyone's fears were put to rest and all that was left was a very messy parking lot!

Ask Casey & Kelly

by ???
of The Grizzly

Dear Casey and Kelly,
I'm really worried about my roommate. I don't know exactly what akes someone an alcoholic, but it seems as if she's becoming one. He drinks every night until she's completely out of control. Her work is suffering and she blows off all of her friends and her boyfriend so that she can drink. I've tried to say something to her, but she just denies that she has a problem. She tries to hide her drinking from me now, but I can still smell the alcohol when I come into the room. What's the right thing for me to do in this situation? Do I keep nagging her, or do I call her parents, or do I tell one of the campus counselors?

leave Help

Dear Please Help,

I definitely think that you are right - she needs help. She is lucky to have a good roommate and friend like you. I think the best way to combat this problem is to talk about it. It is going to be hard but she will hopefully thank you for it later when she understands the full extent of her problem. You should be prepared for some hostility, but remember that you are actually helping her in the long run. Tell her that you only want to see her healthy and happy without the aid of alcohol. If you come into the conversation with the facts, her lacking school work and her ditching her friends and boyfriend, she will be more likely to listen. You might also want to go talk to her boyfriend and other friends to see if they agree with your position on her drinking. Remember that this is a difficult subject and your roommate will probably feel that she is being attacked when you confront her, so be compassionate!

—Kelly

Dear Please Help,

Kelly is right. You are a really good friend, and it's great that you're concerned. I just want to add a little to what Kelly said. Chances are, things aren't going to go very smoothly, and your roommate won't easily admit she has a problem, even if you and all of her friends confront her. Be ready for her to be hostile towards you, and even blame all of her problems on you. My advice to you is to keep nagging her for a while, but more importantly to see a counselor yourself and get professional advice on how to correctly go about solving this problem. There is no need to give the counselor your roommate's name right away. Listen to what he/she has to say, try to work with the problem, and remember that you cannot help someone who doesn't want to be helped. Don't blame yourself if things don't clear up right away. It takes more than just you admitting that your roommate has a problem; she has to too.

Dear Casey and Kelly,

I am a freshman and I'm having a hard time adjusting to college. All my friends at other schools seem to be fine but I just feel like I am not truly happy here. It seems like I've had awhile to get used to college life. I can't understand why I am not able to make myself like school and like being here at Ursinus. I have tried talking to my friends here but they don't understand.

When I talk to them about it they act like I am attacking them and that I don't really like them. I love my friends here but it is just not the same. HELP ME!!

SM

SM-

I know exactly how you are feeling. I was a little unsure of my stay at Ursinus my freshman year. I even started to look at other schools and wanted to transfer. I had to do a lot of thinking to make my decision to stay here. I think the best idea for you would be to talk to your friends and tell them how you feel. Maybe they'll be more understanding if you explain to them about how you want to be happy and you want to keep them as friends. Tell them that you care for them and remember that it takes time to make friends that last. College is a difficult time for everyone. It is hard to face all of these changes, especially being all alone for the first time. It is good to be independent but it is also good to know that you have friends you can count on. I think that you need to get to know yourself better and you'll be able to make the right decision for yourself. This will help you begin to adjust to your new college life and hopefully you will soon feel a part of the Ursinus Community soon!

—Kelly

Dear SM,

I agree with a lot of what Kelly said. You should try to talk to your friends again. I have a feeling that they don't know how serious you are. Sit them down and make them understand that this is a big issue for you, and I'm sure they'll be more than willing to offer support. You didn't really mention what about Ursinus you don't like, or can't adjust to. If you're problem has to do with the location, size or curriculum of the school, then maybe transferring isn't such a bad idea. However, if your main concerns are with feeling as if you belong, and missing home, I suggest you give Ursinus another try. It's hard to be a freshman, but as the months go on, you begin to find your place on campus. If you decide that you really want to give Ursinus the try that it deserves, be optimistic, go out and have fun. It sounds like you already have a secure group of friends, don't forget what they are there for. Make sure they completely understand your problem, and talk to them! I have no doubt that they'll offer the support you need!

Lou's Movie Reviews

by Lou Nemphos
of The Grizzly

Boogie Nights: Finally, a film about the world's #1 money making industry, the pornography industry. I kid you not. The adult film industry made more money last year than any other entertainment industry. Here's another interesting fact, every X-rated film ever made has grossed a profit. It was only a matter of time before Hollywood tried to capitalize on its success, hence the creation of Boogie Nights. It focuses on the days, nights, and lives of the X-rated industry.

Mark Wahlberg stars as Eddie Adams, a dim-witted strapping young lad who hopes of becoming a star. Even though he lacks smarts, there's one thing he doesn't lack, an X-large Johnson. Veteran adult film director, Jack Horner (played wonderfully by Burt Reynolds), takes him under his wing and teaches him the ropes. Eddie changes his name to Dirk Diggler, and becomes intimate with an eclectic cast of characters including: Amber Waves (Julianne Moore), the nicest sex/drug addict you'll ever meet. Buck (Don Cheadle), whose dreams of Buck's Hi-Fi Stereo World are marred by his choice of profession. Little Bill (William H. Macy), who dreams of once his wife would stop sleeping with everyone else and sleep with him. Roller Girl (Heather Graham), who wishes she'd stop running into her high school classmates. And Reed Rothchild, played by the always creepy John C. Reilly, whose—well—really creepy.

The movie is broken down into two parts. The fun you have while making it to the top, and then once you're at the top, the only place left to go, down. Even though the characters are dumb, director Paul T. Anderson (Hard 8), doesn't sink to their level. He intelligently humanizes porn stars showing that they're not just sex objects, they're real people with real problems. Anderson makes the points that some people never change and for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction.

Incidentally, you see Wahlberg's massive Mr. friendly, but don't feel inferior guys, it's prosthetic. So, break out those bell bottoms, break in those platform shoes and enjoy some Boogie Nights. Rating: (out of 4 stars): 1/2 (3 and 1/2 stars) In Theaters Now:

The Devil's Advocate: Keanu Reeves and a horrible ending mar Al Pacino's outstanding performance as Lucifer. The 2:30 running time makes you feel like you're in hell. Rating:  (2 stars)

I Know What You Did Last Summer: You've seen it done before, and you've seen it done better. This time four teens are terrorized by someone who looks like the guy on the box of Gordon's Fishsticks. Rating: *1/2 (1 and 1/2 stars)

Gattaca: Extremely creepy film about the dangers of genetic engineering. Ethan Hawke stars in the best science fiction film since Aliens. Rating: 1/2 (3 and 1/2 stars)

Kiss the Girls: Ashley Judd and Morgan Freeman give good performances, but not good enough to save this run of the mill serial killer movie. Rating:  (2 stars)

Red Corner: Utterly ridiculous describes this movie's acting, story, and dialogue as Richard Gere suffers from culture shock accused of a murder he didn't commit. Don't touch this one with a 40 foot pole. Rating: * (1 star)

Seen anything funny on campus lately? We have. Becky knows she will never forget seeing her intoxicated roommate, Kathleen McDaniel, make like Jim Carrey in Dumb and Dumber, and talk out of her rear end. Molly on the other hand, still laughs when she thinks about fellow gymnast Cindy Leahy on the top of the stairs at Commonwealth after surgery. Cindy exclaims, "I'm finally pain free!" Of course this did not last because right after she said this Cindy fell all the way down the steps. After laughing about our favorite Ursinus bloopers, we decided to come to you and find out what will always make you laugh. This is what you said...

Reimert Suite Beat

by Jay Wisnosky
of The Grizzly

Attention Ursinus campus! Coming soon there will be a weekly feature about a randomly selected suite in Reimert. "Why Reimert?", you might ask. Well hey, almost everyone has lived there or someday will. So why not start covering the suites that give this campus its character.

Starting next week, there will be a beat in the Grizzly that covers one suite in Reimert. I will find out who lives there, what makes them so special, and what they think of the beautiful living quarters that make up Reimert. The random suite will be picked from a hat (Kory's Axeman hat to be exact), but if you think your suite has something "sweet" to offer, let me know and we'll see what happens.

Dorm Improvements

by Jay Wilkes

of The Grizzly

After arriving on campus each year, students are thrown into a dreary dorm room. These dwellings contain only the bare necessities: a central ceiling light, a bed, desk, chair and dresser for each roommate. For the first few months, this may be comfortable, but as the year goes on, rearranging or adding furniture could make the dorm more livable.

There are some things that can be added to help a dorm room seem more like home. Adding a loft can help budget space better. A loft is a raised platform on which you can place a mattress to use as a bed. If it is built large enough, it can also be used as shelving. This shelf adds extra storage to the room and maximize space. The additional storage area could make the dorm room more organized by allowing materials to be moved from the floor and placed where they are more accessible.

Another item that can make a room more comfortable is a couch. A couch can make a room more comfortable because it gives the tenants a larger variety of seating options. It also brings a touch of home into the room. Whether this is a love seat, full size couch, or a sectional doesn't matter. The size should be what the roommates agree on and choose.

When it comes time to effectively improve a dorm room it does not matter whether a couch or loft is used. Either can accomplish the task of adding character to the room. It is purely up to the tenants to decide which, if either, they want. Stay tuned for more tips on how to make your room more comfortable.

HOROSCOPES

by Carolyn Harfman

of The Grizzly

Yet another week of horoscopes. Some more info on Scorpio is that his esoteric planet, or its ruler over the constellation, is Mars and his color is blue-green. More on Scorpio next week. On to the signs.

Scorpio the Scorpion (Oct.21-Nov.20)- People can be exasperating at times. Count yourself as lucky that only a few are actually causing you problems. Attain a sense of perspective for the week and things will go smoothly. Maintain a sense of humor, because a friend might be divulging some info that you might not find so funny. Make light of a difficult situation.

Sagittarius the Archer (Nov.21-Dec.20)- Jupiter's link to the Sun implies the need for less guesswork and more measurement. There is no coincidence that the keystone of an arch is a "Sagitta," you are very aware of your position in life. When you find it, everything will fall into place. This weekend is going to be a bumpy one, hold on for a fun ride.

Capricorn the Goat (Dec.21-Jan.20)- The Sun is exasperating your ruler, Saturn. Your week will be better if you let your guard down. You are doing too much work and not enough play. A mystery is slowly unraveling, pay attention or you may miss out on someone.

Aquarius the Water Bearer (Jan.21-Feb.20)- Venus suggests that where your intellect can't guide you this week, your instinct will. Trust it. Fights with friends will only get solved if you're open to compromise. Keep your eyes open for an unexpected crush. You will find them where you least expect them.

Pisces the Fish (Feb.21-Mar.20)- Stay in this week and save up for the weekend. Saturday night especially will turn out to be a blast. Encourage others to come out and join in your fun. By Sunday, you will be bushed and in need of some rest, but don't take too much or you will fall way behind on your work.

Aries the Ram (Mar.21-Apr.20)- Someone's meddling will really get under your skin this week, Neptune says it is best to bide your time. Venus is providing some opportunity for love this weekend, be careful of Taurus, Rams and Bulls don't mix.

Taurus the Bull (Apr.20-May 19)- There are no easy options this week. Taking the long road has its rewards, but it sure is harder. Uranus suggests that if you do this the payoff will come sooner than expected. This weekend be out and about, staying in isn't really you anyway.

Gemini the Twins (May 21-June 20)- Success will soon be coming in what you have strived for most. Don't give up or all of your hard work will be lost on somebody else. Neptune's link to Mercury implies you are being stagnant in relationships. If this keeps up, you can kiss it good-bye.

Cancer the Crab (June 21-July 20)- As you will learn, we do not need to be rich to be happy. The path to where you want to be can easily be altered by outside influences. Re-evaluate what is really important to you. Your romantic life will be jump started in the middle of the week. Pay close attention to a friend, they might be the spark to this fire.

Leo the Lion (July 21-Aug.20)- Jupiter's square to the Sun is saying move forward, not back. Pay attention to what is coming up and stop mulling over the past. The sooner you let it go, the better off you'll be. Your dreams will be wild throughout the week. Pay attention to them, they are trying to tell you something.

Virgo the Virgin (Aug.21-Sept.20)- Neptune is suggesting that you are overcomplicating your life right now. Take it back to simpler times, before it's too late. Understanding others will help you achieve stasis in your life. Balance is very important to you, achieve it and things will go smoothly. Rekindling an old relationship this week will just make your life even more confusing. Take some time out for yourself.

Libra the Scales (Sept.21-Oct.20)- Your imagination is on overload this week. Stop being so paranoid and accept what is being handed to you. There can be some gains in catching up on work this weekend, but going out is more your style. Since you're so good at weighing out your options, make sure you help a friend in need, ignoring them will only prove bad for you.

Help Yourself, Help Others

by Rebecca Class & Molly Jennings
of the Grizzly

You see a sixteen year old throwing up in the bushes outside of a party. He's obviously had far too much to drink and he is not dressed for the cold fall weather. What do you do? Do you stop to make sure that he is okay, or do you keep walking? Halloween night most of us just walked by, laughing at his sad state.

This occurred during a Greek alcohol-free weekend which was prompted by the previous weekend's drinking related hospitalizations. Three students were rushed to the emergency room after carelessly consuming too much alcohol at fraternity rushes. What does this mean to the campus? It means that we have to learn to drink and party more responsibly. It means we have to learn our limits and stick to them. This week the Greek Community held several meetings which informed students of the need for responsible drinking, and risks involved in alcohol use.

Speakers included members of fraternities and sororities, and EMS members on campus.

The meetings were about drinking responsibility and being in control of your own alcohol consumption. The message was to know your limit and to not exceed it. People should drink for fun and not for intoxication. Don't drink to excess. The four ways that a person can tell that they need to stop drinking are: 1) Loss of inhibitions 2) Poor judgement 3) Slow reaction time and 4) Poor coordination.

If everyone on campus tried to act more responsible and stopped drinking once they were at their limit the campus would be free of these scares we've experienced recently.

Another factor we must remember is that there are many factors, such as drug use, moods and emotions, that determine how fast and hard alcohol will hit a person.

The Ursinus community needs to all join together and help prevent these problems from occurring. We must all watch ourselves as well as take care of those around us.

Ursinus Humanities Survive

by Jen Stellato

special to the Grizzly

I am writing in response to the article "Ursinus: The Pseudo Liberal Arts College," and let me say that I totally disagree. Yes, this school is big on the sciences, but Ursinus College also has wonderful facilities for the humanities. As an English major I have had the privilege to use these facilities, and work with the fine professors who teach the English courses offered here.

First, I must address the opinion that the facilities for science are better than the facilities for the humanities. The Phaler renovations were paid for by donations, donations that were given for this specific purpose. Kurt Miller, did you by chance forget about Olin? Yes, Olin was built four years ago. And what is it used for? You guessed it - the humanities. Located in Olin is the Foreign Language Lab that Miller so nicely left out of his article. This lab allows for computer interaction, hands on learning of languages through cassettes and videos, and also provides the news in many different languages.

The teachers of the Humanities must also be mentioned here. I have interacted with many "...Ursinus College also has wondrous facilities for the humanities."

professors of the Humanities who are doctors in their fields. We also have two visiting professors at Ursinus College. In addition to their extensive education, these professors spend time outside of class to answer questions, and explain material further.

This campus also offers a writing center, supervised by Dr. Lionarons, an English professor, which assists students in writing and editing papers. So, why did you neglect to mention them, Miller? Maybe it was because there is nothing anyone can say about the fine professors we have here at Ursinus College.

Another aspect of this article that I must address is the radio station argument. Ursinus College is a small school, and the radio station has few, if any, listeners. So why should we get a transmitter? The money the college would spend on a transmitter could be put toward the humanities which you think are so lacking.

Finally Miller, as you made clear in your article, it appears as though you have many problems with this college, so my question to you is, why did you come here? Personally I think you should transfer, and stop wasting the newspaper's time and effort typing and printing your ridiculous complaints that no one wants to read anyway!

Are Greeks Scapegoats?

by Jill Fennimore

Special to the Grizzly

In case you were unaware of why there were no parties allowed the weekend of October 31st, just ask any Greek. Why ask a Greek? Since Greeks are the hosts of the majority of the parties here at Ursinus College, they are held accountable for anything that goes wrong at a party. I understand that because the Greeks host the parties, they should be held accountable, but only to a certain degree. Ultimately, it should be the individual who is held responsible for his or her own actions. For example, for the actions of a certain freshman, Chi Rho and ZX could lose their charters, even though mature precautions were made in supplying non-alcoholic beverages.

After attending parties held by both frats, two freshmen drank so much (keep in mind that they could have been drinking prior to the rushes) that they had to be hospitalized. Why in the world should Chi Rho or ZX, or all the Greeks for that matter, be punished because of individuals who do not know when to stop consuming alcohol? Why should one person (or two people) ruin it for everyone else? In addition, how in the world are Greeks supposed to know an individual's limit.

Every one handles their alcohol differently, and therefore, self-regulation is the key to prevent such unnecessary problems from occurring again. We are old enough and (most of us) are mature enough to know that moderation is another crucial factor in the consumption of alcohol. It is understandable that people make mistakes; however, the individual should be held accountable, not all students of Ursinus.

By blaming the Greek system for an individual's mistake, the Greeks are progressively becoming scapegoats. The administration is looking for someone to blame for this incident, and the the Greeks have become a convenient target. The administration needs to understand that Greeks are aware of the fact that they are out to get us, and we take precautions, like serving non-alcoholic beverages, in attempts to defend ourselves when problems like this arise. The only reason I see for some people being anti-Greek is that they use the sorority/fraternity stereotypes to wrongly judge. Contrary to popular belief, not all Greeks drink. Also, Greeks do not exist solely to party, but partake in numerous community service projects. For example, Tau Sigma Gamma hosted a haunted house for children in the community. Chi Rho asks students to donate portions of their Zack power to feed the homeless, and KDK offers an egg hunt for community children every Easter.

In society, when someone makes a mistake, they are quick to blame everyone but themselves. The bad judgement of individuals at a party should not be blamed on Greeks. If the Greeks keep receiving the brunt of these problems, Greek life at Ursinus will not exist for much longer. This is such a shame, because from a personal experience, Greek life has taught me a lot about friendship, unity and loyalty and made a positive impact on my life. Once people learn how to act responsibly, then everyone at Ursinus, especially the Greeks will be happy.

The Dry Spell

by Kurt Miller

of the Grizzly

Are we still in kindergarten? Are we still trying to put wooden blocks into the right holes and enjoying our nap time. Well with the way that this whole two week long "no party" ruling came about it sure feels that way.

When is civilized society going to learn that punishing the whole for the actions of the few not only doesn't work, but is barbaric in ideology as well. Actions like this made by a governing body were not fair in kindergarten and are mind blowingly appalling for grown adults. And yes, we are all adults on this campus, and should be treated as such.

I view this whole situation as a microcosm of a cancerous attitude which is growing in America. This attitude is "It isn't my fault I screwed up, someone else made me." What a load of bullshit. These freshmen played with the hard stuff and it bit them in the ass. It has happened to everyone I know. What a responsible society should expect and a responsible person should do is learn from the experience, admit he or she screwed up, and then move on with his or her own damn life. My opinion is that everyone is responsible for themselves on this campus.

Don't Complain, Do Something

by Joanna Doyle

Sports Editor

I work part-time covering Ursinus events for a local newspaper. As part of my job, I have to attend most campus events, especially lectures. No matter how many of these things I go to, I am still amazed that no matter what the topic is, there are barely a handful of students who attend (without being forced by a professor).

An opinion piece in last week's Grizzly quoted a student as saying, "Students don't want to come and hear a lecture. We hear that all day in classes," as a primary reason why so few people come to listen to campus speakers.

I got to wondering, if these talks are just like going to any boring classroom lecture. Why would the editor I work for want me to write stories about lectures that non-Ursinus people would be interested in? There must be something else valuable that these speakers have to offer.

Maybe you don't know the names Arthur Caplan, Terry Gross, Kenneth Stern or Jean Elshtain. I didn't. But even if you don't know that these people are nationally, sometimes internationally, famous in their fields, I'd be surprised if at least one of their topics didn't interest you.

"...students have to take some of the blame too."

Don't you think a leading medical ethicist's opinion on cloning and genetic engineering might make you curious? Isn't it possible a highly respected interviewer's stories about bombed celebrity interviews might make you laugh? Wouldn't a discussion of the American militia movement or a leading political scholar's theory that democracy isn't working, make you angry? Or at least make you think? If not, there must be something that would make it worth skipping a "Simpsons" or "Seinfeld" weeknight rerun once or twice a month.

We are all quick to complain about this college (see "Ursinus: The Pseudo Liberal Arts College," "Award Winning My Ass," "Sometimes Ursinus Ur-Suckus," or any other issue of this semester's Grizzly.) It's easy to do so because few people would deny that Ursinus has plenty of problems, and complaining doesn't require us to actually do anything.

But students have to take some of the blame too. Complaints without solutions are worthless. With all of the college's shortcomings, the Arts and Lectures committee is one area where Ursinus really seems to be making an effort to get students involved and find out what we want. If we don't get involved or at least voice an opinion about what we want, what kind of encouragement is that for the college to make any similar efforts in the future?

Player Profile

*Despite Disappointing
Season, All's Well with These Ends*

by Michael T. Bauer
of the Grizzly

Andrew Bauer and Chris Lakatos have two identities.

College students by day, these athletes are an offensive coordinator's nightmare by night.

Bauer and Lakatos are members of Ursinus football's highly talented defense, ranked second in the Centennial Conference in total defense.

On the field, Bauer and Lakatos both play arguable one of the most demanding positions, defensive end. Despite their defferent playing styles, they both create havoc for opposing offenses.

Lakatos, a sophomore, creates many problems for the opponent. During his two seasons at Ursinus, he has started all but two games. He enjoyed a highly decorated freshman campaign where he received enormous recognition. All of it was well deserved.

During the memorable 1996 season where the Bears stunned the conference by going undefeated, Lakatos was a leader.

Defensively, he led the team in sacks (9) and forced fumbles (6). He also recovered two loose balls and intercepted one pass which he returned for a touchdown.

Lakatos down-played his achievements, recalling, "That season I was lucky. I did not expect to start coming in as a freshman. However, the competition among 'team 104' (his Reimert suite mates,) brought out the best in all of us."

True, Lakatos lives with some highly talented athletes -- fullbacks Nangle and McClosky, and defensive phenomenon Pete Hinkly, but his accomplishments were more than mere luck.

His defensive counterpart Andy Bauer said, "Lakatos has outstanding speed. His persistence and ability to get the ball is why he had such a big season."

Coaches have unofficially clocked his 40-year dash time around 4.6 seconds, incredible for player who stands 6'1" and weighs 220 pounds.

Lakatos's speed and athletic ability have also caught the attention of other conference coaches. In 1996, Lakatos was named All-ECAC Division II South Rookie of the Year. Additionally, he was honored on the second team defense by both the ECAC and the Centennial Conference.

Lakatos's speed allows him to strike quickly before a player can react. This year, Chris has registered three sacks and seven tackles for loss.

If Lakatos is the lightning on the Ursinus Defense, then Bauer would have to be the thunder. While Lakatos has the speed to go around the foe, Bauer has the strength to go through them.

A junior, Bauer is recognized as one of the strongest players on the team. It is no wonder, considering his 6'1" 245-pound frame and a bench press over 400 pounds.

Bauer is a three-year starter for the Bears and is currently enjoying his best season. He leads the team with five sacks for minus-42 yards. He has forced two fumbles, recovered a fumble and intercepted a pass.

Bauer said, "My experience and size has paid dividends for me this season."

The lightning has also seen the war path of the thunder. Lakatos said, "Andy's best quality is his strength and intensity."

Both players agree what they will remember most about football at Ursinus is the friendships and bonds they made with other players.

"I will always remember the guys that were 'team 104,'" Lakatos said.

The 1997 season is over but both these athletes look forward to the promise of 1998. These defensive ends have some lofty goals.

"Next season, we will win like we did in 1996. Also, it's important to have fun," Lakatos said.

Bauer agreed, "Next year we will be undefeated and back in the Division III Playoffs. I want to double my sack totals from this season."

Playing this game may be fun for these two, but for the rest of the conference there is a warning. A storm is coming, complete with thunder and lightning. They are bringing with them a group of angry Bears.

Baseball Getting into the Swing of Things

by Mike Hoffman
Of the Grizzly

After coming off a disappointing season last year, the Bears are anticipating a better performance this year.

Thirty-five players tried out this fall, including 12 freshman and two transfers. After an intense fall practice, the returning players are looking to bring the team back to the way it was in 95-96.

The '98 team comprises nine seniors, and coach Thomas is counting on his veteran players to bring the team back to the top of the Centennial Conference.

Three senior pitchers return to the team, they are Brian Creelman, Phil Nagengast, and Nate Smiley, who are all looking forward to mowing done the opposing batters.

The entire infield returns with the exception of All Conference first baseman Brian McTear. Dirk Cleveland (3B) was the team's leading hitter in '97, and his soft hands assure the team no holes around third. Jeff DeSimone (SS) and Mike Romello (2B) are three year starters that have a good chemistry up the middle enabling them to turn the double play at anytime. A.J. Gray and Chris Jones return to do the catching duties for the Bears while the versatile Ben Mills is in the outfield.

Coach Thomas stated, "this was the toughest time of my 28 year coaching career..." A number of players had to be cut in order to get to a workable number. It is good for the program to have this much interest and intense competition per position, however, it was difficult to release individuals who have worked hard."

The Bears season is set for a full 36 game schedule in the spring, beginning with 11 games in Cocoa, Florida during their annual spring break trip. If you happen to be in Florida during break, go out and support the Bears from March 7-14, 1998. The bears need support for this Florida trip so if you see a kid trying to sell hoagie's, buy one and help out.

Official spring training begins in January for the team and before we know it the baseball season will be upon us. So remember to support the bears and lets hope for a winning season this year.

The Bears have announced several spring baseball clinics for kids.

Spread the word -- clinics are a great way for kids to have fun while the Bears get a chance to demonstrate their skills.

The dates are:

Men's Soccer Drops Final Game to Mules

by Jay Wilkes
of the Grizzly

On Saturday, November 8th, the Ursinus men's soccer team played its final game of the season.

They traveled to Muhlenburg College in the wet dreary weather for an afternoon game.

The game started and proved to be a difficult match for the Bears from the kickoff.

The Mules were a strong team and were able to strike early. Ursinus was disheartened, but the men did not give up.

Even though the Mules scored several more times, the Bears were able to score a goal on a header by Vince Milano. At half time, the score was 5-1 in favor of Muhlenburg. It was the first time in several seasons that the Bears were able to score against the Mules.

As the second half started, the Bears were determined to finish the game strong and not quit. They held the Mules to only one goal during the second half.

The Bears strong second half effort wasn't enough to hold on, though, and the game ended, 6-1, Muhlenburg.

Overall the season was a tough one for the men's soccer team. The men faced tougher competition this season than during the two previous ones. This was reflected by the below .500 record the team achieved during the season. However, with hard work, determination, and fewer injuries the men should be able to turn it around next year. So until then, good luck preparing for next year's season.

FROM THE SIDELINES

Of the Grizzly

Well its been a couple of weeks since the last paper has come out, so I never got chance to look at the NBA. Lets' just hope I am better at predicting the NBA than I am the NFL.

Let's start in the Eastern Conference. There is really only one Team in the East. DA' BULLS. Yes, Da' Bulls are clearly the class of the conference.

I know they are struggling right now, but when Scottie Pippen gets healthy its over. Pippen was the Bulls second leading scorer and rebounder; he also led the team in assists. Pipen is one of the top five players in the league and when he gets back the planets will realign and life will get back to normal.

When the dust settles, DA' Bulls will be there in June. Now to look at the teams that are trying to catch the Bulls.

In the Atlantic there are two teams battling for the division -- the Heat and the Knicks. Both teams are solid. They Knicks have Patrick Ewing and Alan Houston while the Heat have Alonzo Mourning and Tim Hardaway.

Watching these two teams battle will be fun. In the end the Heat have a better point guard and a better coach (Pat Riley) and as a result they will win in a interesting matchup.

The Wizards will improve and probably will make the playoffs, but they just do not have the defense to matchup with New York or Miami.

As for the Nets, Sixers, and Magic, they will find themselves in the lottery. Each of these teams is getting better, and in a couple of years look out for the Celtics-- they are going to something.

In the Central there are the Bulls and then there is everyone else.

The only team that matches up well with the Bulls is the Atlanta Hawks. The Hawks have a great back court with Steve Smith and Mookie Blaylock. They also have Mutumbo in the pivot and Christian Laettner at the the powerforward spot.

This is good team that might be the second best team in the conference. They are the only team in the league that possesses a good big man and a big guard who has at least the size to matchup with Jordan.

Unfortunately, they do not have enough to beat the Bulls yet, but they are getting very close.

On a side note, look for Alan Henderson to win the Most Improved Player award. He's finally healthy and getting the job done on the court. The rest of the playoff spots are wide open.

Any of the remaining teams, with the exception of the Raptors, could make the playoffs.

My surprise pick in the East is the Milwaukee Bucks who -- mark my words -- will get the final playoff spot. They have the best young back court in the league with Ray Allen and Terrell Brandon. These two guys are going to be fun to watch, and they will also win games.

In the Midwest division there are three teams who could steel this division: The Jazz, Rockets and Spurs. In the Pacific there are also three teams that could win that division as well: The Lakers, Suns, and Sonics. This conference is up for grabs.

The Team with the most talent is the Lakers. This team is as stacked as Delta Pi's intramural Basketball team. They have all the pieces. Shaq at center, Eddie Jones at the two, Risk Fox at the three, Eldin Camble at the four, and Nick Van Exel at the one. Off the bench they bring Robert Horry, Kobe Bryant, and Sean Rooks.

This team is loaded, but questions remain. They were eliminated last year. In their division are also the Suns who may be the fastest team in the league. They have: Jason Kidd at the point, they have Kevin Johnson at the two, Rex Chapman at small forward, Cliff Robinson at power forward, and Antonio McDyess at center.

This team will be the most entertaining team in the League. If you want to see scoring tune in and watch this team play.

Finally there the Sonics. They have Gary Payton at the point, Hersey Hawkins at the two, Detlef Schremp at the three, Vin Baker at the four, and Jim McIlvaine at the five. This is a veteran team that has been to the finals before. Its trade mark pressure defense could carry them to the playoffs.

This division is tough, but I have to go with Lakers. They just have too much talent. I really think they will win. I like the Suns, but they do not have the size to match up with the Lakers.

As for the Sonics they do not matchup with the Lakers defensively. Yes, Gary Payton can take one of the guns out, but Jim McIlvaine will have to stop Shaq, and that will not happen.

Midwest is as crazy as an Ursinus house party being shut down by security.

On one hand there are old teams likes the Jazz and Rockets. Then there is the slightly younger Spurs. The babies of the division are the Timberwolves.

I think that Jazz are too old; they had their chance last season and that was it. John Stockton can not defend the other point guards any more even with his tremendous court savvy.

The Rockets are old but they do not look as old as the Jazz not too mention they have one more superstar than the Jazz.

They have three stars on this team: Charles Barkely, Hakeem Olajuwon, and Clyde Drexler. The Jazz only have Stockton and Karl Malone. That is why they will win more games than the Jazz.

However, it is the Spurs who will win the division. Rookie of the year Tim Duncan and David Robinson will lead the Spurs to the division title. The Timberwolves will make some noise but they are still too young.

Where does that leave the NBA? In the West the Lakers will beat the Spurs in the West while the Bulls will beat the Heat and win the East. In the Championship it will be the Bulls in seven.

The reason is that the Lakers will have a much tougher road than Bulls and they will run out of gas down the stretch.

Plus, if the game is close you have to put your money on Jordan.

THAT'S IT AND I AM OUTTA HERE!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

The Grizzly Presents:
The All-McGovern Team

Intramurals are not only fun -- they are also intense. It was a great year for intramural Flag Football. There were a lot of interesting teams and games. In the end, the four best teams made the playoffs. Those teams were: Delta Pi, the NWO, Po' White Trash, and the Outsiders. In the end The class of the league was the Outsiders. They went undefeated and only gave up six points in two playoff games. So, now that the champs have been crowned, its time to hand out the post season awards. I saw every team play at least once so I hope I made everyone happy. But if not, well to be honest, I don't care. So, here they are:
