Choose to Reuse: Recycling at Ursinus

Meghan Jarrett
Grizzly News Writer

Chances are you've noticed the addition of green bins placed alongside trash cans in most of the classrooms on campus. Hopefully, you've even used these bins for your soda cans and not to prop doors open as the residents of the Quad do.

The green bins that have been placed in buildings around campus are actually for the disposal of recyclable materials. The bins have since been removed from the Quad, but have been placed in academic buildings across campus.

The new recycling program is headed up by Environmental Studies professor Richard Wallace. Last semester Wallace, with the help of his one hundred level Environmental Studies students, implemented a test program on campus.

The students acted as volunteers and placed bins in various areas and monitored them to collect data to use for budgeting purposes.

If the test runs were successful, it would be less challenging to convince the school to work the program into its budget. Bins were initially placed in Beardwood-Paisley-Stauffer, which represented the entire residential village, and Phfaler to represent the academic buildings.

The test run ended up being unsuccessful in 944 and as Environmental Studies student Tricia Ciucci stated, "a disaster" in the Quad. The only area that students seemed to be taking advantage of the containers was in Phfaler. Because of the programs success in that area, the decision was made to add bins to all of the academic buildings. A plan is still in formation to help make recycling in the dormitories and houses more feasible.

For now students choosing to recycle in those areas can place the recyclables into the large green bins located near the dumpsters.

Currently the materials able to be recycled in the academic buildings include glass, aluminum, and plastic. The program's facilitators are attempting to add paper to that list as well.

The Environmental Studies program was, however, capable of convincing school officials to only purchase recycled paper (with the exception of the Admissions' Office).

All mailings sent from the campus are printed on recycled paper, and campus printers and copy machines use recycled paper as well.

All members of the campus community are urged to take advantage of the various areas where recycling is available. It only takes an extra second to separate your recyclables from your regular trash, and you will be contributing to the preservation of the environment.

Ways to "Shop Green"

(According to Earth911.com)

- Buy Products in large sizes; Avoid Excess Packaging:
- Buy large cereal boxes instead of small, individual sized ones
- Buy juice concentrates, and make in a re-useable plastic jug/pitcher
- Buy gallon sized jugs of water instead of personal sized ones
- Buy Reusable, long lasting items:
- Use rechargeable batteries
- Use a real camera instead of disposable ones

- Use cloth towels and sponges instead of paper towels
- Use real plates/cups/silverware

instead of plastic

- Reuse plastic and brown paper bags when you shop, or use a canvas tote

Volunteer Program Breaks the Bank

Nicole Beck
Grizzly Writer

In an uncertain job market, college students recently lost an option for service after graduation.

Two weeks ago, President Bush cut funding for AmeriCorps by $100 million dollars. This money that would normally fund twenty thousand of the fifty thousand volunteers has been omitted from the final package of $937 million in supplemental funds provided to the organization.

This budget cut means a popular volunteer opportunity for students not entering the job market or graduate school has been eliminated.

Many students have committed their time for a year helping AmeriCorps and its numerous service programs all across America. AmeriCorps is a network of national service programs that engage more than fifty thousand Americans each year in intensive service to meet critical needs in education, public safety, health, and the environment.

Members serve through more than 2,100 nonprofits, public agencies, and faith-based organizations. They tutor and mentor youth, build affordable housing, teach computer skills, clean parks and streams, run after-school programs, and help communities respond to disasters. The most notable program for college students is Teach for America.

Teach for America, an organization under AmeriCorps recruits recent college graduates and places them in at-risk school districts for two years. Many Teach for America corps members, who earn a regular beginning teacher salary, also receive "educational awards" that are used to pay back past or future educational expenses. Because of the cut in funds, members will not receive these awards. Even though funding has been denied, Teach for America continues to recruit at campuses nationwide.

Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton took these cuts in funds very personally. Senator Clinton told the Associated Press that President Bush is breaking a promise made to her husband to protect AmeriCorps.

The Clintons, who are responsible for the enactment of the program back in 1994, were disappointed in Bush's failure to force the issue with his own party.

"When my husband spoke with President Bush as they were changing the leadership of our country, the only thing my husband asked President Bush was to take care of AmeriCorps and national service," Clinton told AmeriCorps supporters at the beginning of the month.

A White House Spokesperson, Scott McClellan, noted that President Bush "is very committed to expanding AmeriCorps and expanding the number of members within AmeriCorps, because of the vital role they play in helping people across the country."

Since 1994, more than 250,000 men and women have served in AmeriCorps, providing assistance to millions of Americans. Their budget of $425 million helps members who serve full or part-time receive an education award of $4,725 to pay for college, graduate school, or to pay back students loans. They also receive health insurance, training, and student loan deferment, giving college graduates without other plans to volunteer.

Now that funding has been cut there may be less job offerings than in previous years. To learn more about joining, or to get information about how you can write letters to your congressmen to restore funding, go to www.americorps.org.

Get Registered to Get Out the Vote

Nicole Beck
Grizzly Writer

In preparation for the upcoming November elections, voting is on the minds of many students...or is it?

For many students, interest in the political arena seems to be missing even on a liberal arts campus. Some speculate students are unaware of how to get involved in the political process by registering to vote. The UC Democrats took the initiative last week to help students register in time for upcoming elections.

Starting with a stock of fifty registration forms, the College Democrats had to turn people away after only thirty minutes due to lack of forms. "We received more of a turnout than expected," stated Dennis Vondran who is the treasurer for the UC Democrats. The College Democrats will continue registering students on campus throughout the semester.

It is evident that voting in elections is not as popular as one would assume for a liberal arts college. One reason college students may not vote is an issue of location, but absentee ballots can be the answer for voting away from home.

These can easily be obtained from your county municipal buildings and depending on what county you are in, you may be able to access the ballots online. Applications can be turned in no later than seven days before an election.

Dennis Vondran also gave some good advice on absentee ballots by stating, "A student at Ursinus can legally use the college address as their own so that they may be registered in Montgomery County, and only have to walk to the police station to vote."

Junior Kelly McCloskey gave some insight as to why some students may not be as involved politically on campus. "On a local level I am very much so involved, however, on a national level I am not as aware as I would like to be." In a discussion with members of the College Democrats and the College Republicans a proposal was brought forth to possibly enlighten the campus of political ideas through a newsletter.

According to the campus political organizations, it is always difficult to entice students into coming to a political forum, so paper might be a viable option. Even though the idea is still being talked about, several students mentioned that they would be more likely to read about politics in a newsletter, than sit through a discussion held during the week.

With college-aged students being a large demographic for politicians, the groups urge students to take this opportunity to learn more about the political world around them. One way to do this for local interest is through the Montgomery County Democrats/Republican's webpage.

The Montgomery County Democrats (www.mcdems.org) list everything from potential candidates, to locations of polling places.

Also helpful is the Montgomery County Republicans webpage (www.montgomerycogop.com) which identifies specific platform stances for each candidate.

Don't forget if it is the national arena you are interested in finding more information about, don't be timid about checking out the Republican National Committee's webpage (<http://www.rnc.org>) or even heading over to the Democratic National Committee's webpage (<http://www.democrats.org>).

Now with the resources at hand students can become enlightened voters for the upcoming elections in 2004.

Message from the Dean's Office

In accordance with the Ursinus College Faculty Handbook, student comments on teaching effectiveness and student-faculty interaction are invited at the time of a faculty member's review for tenure. Although student letters must be signed to be considered, student names may be withheld, upon request, when their comments are shared with the Promotion and Tenure Committee, and the faculty member.

This year, the following members of the faculty are being reviewed for tenure:
Dr. Chris Cellucci, Physics and Astronomy
Dr. Michele McLennan, Business and Economics

Your feedback is strongly encouraged and will assist the Committee in its review process. Letters should be sent to Dean Judith T. Levy, Office of the Dean by October 15, 2003.

Mohr Conspiracy Theories: A Humorous Look at Serious Problems

Trevor Mohr

Slow down! Ahhh! Gadunk scrape, gadunk scrape. All over campus student vehicles bear the scars of the new speed bumps installed on the Physical Plant side of campus. Interestingly enough, I am among one of those victims.

Last week an article was published involving the possible connection of campus safety to the epidemic of car malfunctions amongst the student body. I was hesitant to speak of the controversy for fear of my own car, and now those fears are grounded on fact.

A bill for almost $500 sits on my desk for a pair of brand new front struts on my six year old car. Apparently, I am not the first student to require repair after venturing over the mountains located next to North Hall and BPS.

As an experiment, I decided to observe the actions of vehicles undertaking the trek up and over the gargantuan mounds. It seems that somehow the interpretation for the reasoning behind speed bumps has become lost. In most situations the goal is to slow down vehicles, not impale them.

Every car that passed over the obstacles either came to a complete stop before taking the steep incline, or suffered a scraped undercarriage. And trust me; a scraped undercarriage does not feel like a tickling feather, it hurts.

"Every time I hear the loud sound of grinding metal no matter how slow I go," says senior Pat Lafferty. Most environmentally concerned drivers on campus own cars that barely clear a dime let alone a mountainous speed bump. In fact, the only vehicles I observed with the ability to clear the "speed walls" were the rugged four-wheel-drive SUVs that so many Americans have come to love. They clear the bumps with little more than a gas guzzling rev of the engine and some screeching as the tires land on the other side.

Is it really necessary to destroy student vehicles to ensure parking for those lucky enough to escape the wrath of campus safety? Some see the decreasing number in drivable cars on campus as a beautification project; others like me see it as holes burning in our pockets.

Nevertheless, a suspicious number of cars have malfunctioned at a surprisingly high rate now that parking spots have dwindled due to the various construction projects and increase in class size on campus.

On a side note, I think everyone who experiences the uncomfortable clank of blown shocks should send their bill to administration, thus maybe receiving some compensation, or finger pointing at who really is to blame for this widespread vehicle epidemic.

Whether freshmen, senior, commuter or resident, we as a student body should stand up for our right to own cars on campus. For the small sum of $60 and amounts owed for repairs.

With the presidential primaries only months away and with ten democratic candidates to choose from, voters have many important decisions to make. Who supports the issues you care about and who has the record of accomplishment to back it up? Even more importantly, who are the candidates running against President Bush in the 2004 election?

The Democratic candidates are Carol Moseley Braun, Wesley Clark, Howard Dean, John Edwards, Dick Gephardt, Bob Graham, John Kerry, Dennis Kucinich, Joe Lieberman, and Al Sharpton. This week the Grizzly will highlight the first five candidates.

Carol Moseley Braun is an African American woman who has experience both domestically and abroad. She served as a senator from Illinois for six years and was the Ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa from 1998-2001. Currently, Braun is a Business Consultant for CMBraun LLC. Braun openly opposed the war in Iraq and she favors universal healthcare.

Wesley Clark is often thought of as one of the most distinguished retired military officers. Clark served in the United States military for thirty-four years and rose to the rank of a 4-star general, the highest ranking in the U.S. military. From 1997 to 2000, Clark was the NATO Supreme Allied Commander and Commander in Chief of the United States European Command. Presently, Clark is chairperson and CEO of Wesley K. Clark and Associates, an advisory and consulting firm. According to Environmentalists for Clark, the Democratic candidate openly opposes drilling in the Arctic Wildlife Refuge.

Howard Dean is a known moderate. He is a physician and former governor of Vermont. During his term, Dean cut the income tax twice, removed the sales tax on most clothing, and reduced the state's long-term debt. In addition, Dean created more than 41,000 jobs in Vermont. Dean is focusing on young voters especially college students through his Internet and word-of-mouth campaign. According to the Dean For America website, if elected president, "Dean will establish a Families & Children Health Insurance Program (FCHIP), building on the successful but limited State Children's Health Insurance Program, offering health insurance to all children and young adults (up to age 25) in America, and all older adults with low incomes."

John Edwards is a senator from North Carolina. As a senator, Edwards has fought for issues concerning the American family, including healthcare alternatives, education, and Social Security. According to JohnEdwards2004, "Senator John Edwards is a strong supporter of women's rights, families, and the right to choose. He has worked to protect Roe vs. Wade."

Dick Gephardt is a congressional representative representing Missouri. After 26 years in Congress, Gephardt is known as a distinguished politician as well as a leader in the Democratic Party. In Congress, Gephardt has helped to raise minimum wage and helped win passage of environmental legislation to clean up Brownfield sites. If elected president, "Gephardt will also expand federal grant and loan programs to keep up with the rising costs of college tuition, increasing the eligibility for financial aid among middle-class families and making the first ten thousand dollars of higher education costs tax-deductible," states Dick Gephardt 2004.

Next week the Grizzly will look at the last five democratic candidates running in the 2003 Presidential primaries.

For more information regarding these candidates, log on to their official campaign websites.

A Look at the Response to Rape at Ursinus

Quinn Dinsmore
Grizzly News Editor

What is the policy concerning rape at Ursinus?

According to the Students Against Rape website, "Ursinus College seeks to maintain a campus environment emphasizing the dignity and worth of all community members and visitors. Due to the prevalence of sexual assault on college campuses, Ursinus has developed a policy pertaining to sexual assault."

The policy provides for (1) procedures sensitive to victims in responding to reports of alleged sexual assaults, including informing victims of medical, legal, counseling and support services both on and off campus; (2) availability of College disciplinary sanctions for those who commit sexual assaults; and (3) full cooperation with legal authorities where investigation and/or prosecution is indicated," the site explains.

Who gets involved when a rape is reported?

Residence Life Staff, Dean Nolan, Collegeville Police, Victim Services of Norristown

How do I know how often this happens here?

According to state law, the college must publish its crime statistics for the public and make the information available to students. The most recent data from the Department of Education reveals two forcible sex offenses in 1999 and one forcible sex offense in a residence hall that same year at Ursinus. In, 2000 and 2001, there were no sex offenses reported to the Office of Postsecondary Education.

How are RAs trained to handle this?

Resident Director Corinthian Ridgeway says the staff prepares for this issue every year. "During training, we held sessions on what their role is and to be conscious of how the victims feel," she explained. Speakers from Planned Parenthood and Victim Services also gave talks throughout summer orientation so the RAs know what resources are available and the consequences of rape to better serve their residents.

Are there any groups on campus dealing with assault?

Students Together Against Rape is one of the student-run services on campus offering that peer-to-peer assistance. They provide support to victims and raise awareness about sexual assault at Ursinus through Take Back the Night and educational programs. According to their website, they are not counselors but can act as a confidential support system.

How can I protect myself?

Dean Nolan believes alcohol is the easiest factor for students to control as a means of protection. "I feel like this is something that happens pretty often at any college, especially with alcohol, she said. "Please be clear about your sexual boundaries and watch your alcohol consumption to protect yourself."

RD Corinthian Ridgeway urges students to be proactive about their safety. "It's not your fault if this happens but you can take measures to decrease your risk. Travel with friends to parties and don't be afraid to say 'no.' If something unwanted does happen, talk with someone you feel comfortable with to get all the help you need."

How Safe Do We Feel?

Rebecca Cohen
Grizzly Staff Writer

Of the benefits of a small college is general safety. In the last issue of The Grizzly, the front page contained an article about a rape that occurred in the quad. Some of us at The Grizzly were wondering if this changed how people looked at their and others' safety on campus. Over the past few days I have asked numerous students three questions. "How safe do you feel the campus is?" "How safe do you feel the campus is for women?" "Has the rape that happened last week changed your opinion on the safety of the campus?" I received a huge array of answers.

Some people feel that the rape was an isolated incident and it did not change their view of campus safety at all. These answers mostly came from male students. Others were very upset that a rape happened on campus—they wanted to know what should be done to prevent more rapes from taking place. These answers came fairly equally from male and female students. Most people felt that this is a very safe campus, and continue to feel so, but also felt that as students we need to take more precautions to protect ourselves and each other.

Many people felt that we were at no risk on campus and saw no problem walking across campus late at night alone. A bunch of people gave me examples of how their own behavior should change. Some girls feel that they don't want to walk around by themselves at night anymore and intend on asking friends to go with them. Although most people feel the campus is still a very safe place, they feel that the rape has opened our eyes to the fact that we are still at risk.

I met with Dean Nolan to discuss how safe she feels the campus is and what, as a community, we need to be doing differently. She told me that we've always been at risk and we always will be at risk for rapes to happen on this campus. There is not much more campus safety can do, as the rape happened in the quad and it would be an invasion of privacy for campus safety to patrol the dorms every night. There is a list that is circulated to all RAs and house coordinators of people who are banned from campus and campus safety has a much more efficient computer system when people register guests.

There is a lot more students can be doing too. Report anything you see that is suspicious. Watch your alcohol consumption—Dean Nolan said that the majority of crimes that happen on campus are alcohol-related. Social hosts need to make sure that they see the ID of everyone who enters parties. Also, do not rig the locks. It may be annoying to have to unlock two sets of doors each time we want to enter the dorms, but it helps keep people who shouldn't be in the building from getting in. Although there have been no crimes in recent years of one being attacked while walking alone at night, everyone should still take caution. If you cannot find someone to walk with you, campus security will come and get anyone at any place on campus and escort them to where they are going.

Although Dean Nolan pointed out a few things that should change on campus, she said that we have an overall very safe campus and most of the students feel the same way. If we follow the basic guidelines for safety, including limiting alcohol consumption, we will continue to have a very safe campus.

The New Addiction: AIM

Elly Calhoun
Grizzly Staff Writer

It's hard to imagine college life without AOL Instant Messenger. When walking down the halls of a given dorm, it is quite common to hear the familiar "ba-da-doop" from various computers. Exchanging phone extensions is a thing of the past; swapping screen names is how it's done now. When I received my housing assignment in August before my freshman year, the first thing I asked my roommate-to-be was for her screen name, so we could chat for free, sans the awkward silences.

Is Instant Messenger an easy escape from things that are difficult to say? Do people use it as a resort that allows them to avoid human contact? It's a lot easier to turn down an invitation or break bad news from behind a computer than to a person's face or even over the phone, where you can hear their reaction.

Even if it takes away from essential interpersonal communications, Instant Messenger is a very convenient commodity. You can track down friends by checking away messages, which is a lot easier than actually picking up the phone and dialing a four digit extension. Instant Messenger also serves as entertainment when not even chatting. Hours can be wasted checking away messages—I checked my whole buddy list before even starting this article. And, of course, there are the people on your list with whom you may not even speak, but you know where they are, whether it be at class, eating, taking a shower, working out, partying, etc. Even though you may not be friends, you most likely know the details of their love lives based on the quotes they may put up in their profile. It's sad, but each and every one of you reading this knows you are guilty of many or all of these things.

What could possibly be wrong with this tool of communication/stalking? As previously mentioned, the reality is that Instant Messenger now serves as a safety net to avoid awkward human contact. It's even worse in adolescence, since these days nearly everyone has a computer with IM. Adolescence is infamous for awkward social settings, and Instant Messenger enables this with those who type their thoughts and sum up feelings with a variety of smiley faces.

I know a high school student who attends a girls school and just loves IM because when she and her friends meet boys from other prep schools, they exchange screen names and are able to keep in touch. I have noticed, however, that the relationships are false ones; people who've only met once become close friends via cyberspace, but when the chance for human contact actually arrives, it is awkward.

What is to come of this IM addicted generation? I can only see it getting worse. Since cell phone plans are so cheap these days, younger kids are getting them, further hiding away from human-to-human contact. And, with text messaging and even IM on the phone, you can have extensive conversations and make elaborate plans without talking to someone. Pretty soon, we'll be calling people by their screen names.

Domo Arigato, Dr. Roboto

Rebecca Cohen
Grizzly Staff Writer

When I have visions of surgery, I always have this sort of fear that a doctor will drop a scalpel or something inside my body, rupturing all my internal organs just as my anesthesia-induced state wears off, and I die painfully. Thankfully, I haven't had to undergo surgery yet, and if I had to, this wouldn't occur. But, there is talk of a new trend in hospitals at Johns Hopkins. There is a robot that can do everything a doctor can; it obeys the doctor's commands from a separate room. Theoretically, a doctor could perform surgery even from his own house.

I think I'll pass on that—I'd rather get the doctor who was bottom of his class at Yale than some high-tech robot from Johns Hopkins. Why, you ask? Well, at least if a human doctor dropped a scalpel in me, the doctor would be able to use finesse to take it out and I'd be none the wiser. If a robo-doc drops it, the first thing that comes to mind is one of those claws which you use to acquire the prize you want. From there, the medical claw would clumsily lower itself and rip all my internal organs to shreds.

Apart from that horrendous nightmare of a surgery, another bad thing that could happen is if some cruel soul infected the robo-doctors with a computer virus, bringing this mildly annoying, occasional plague to a whole new level of absolute danger. The idea of performing surgery from a doctor's home is truly an unwise idea. What if the doctor has a four-year-old running around the house? The doctor might be taking a quick break or consulting a book as the unknowing child sees the machine, thinking it's a new video game. Suddenly, the robo-doc is flailing in all different directions until it eventually explodes and I die. (Yes, for all these examples, I'm putting myself on the surgery table.)

There are too many variables when it comes to robo-docs. Human doctors can think and react to emergency situations far better, in my opinion. Doctors react better when they can use their hands, trusting themselves rather than trying to punch buttons while staring through a computer screen. All in all, we need to leave the care of the people to people themselves.

Out of the Middle East: The End of a Journey

Defne Sarsilmaz

The three biggest pyramids in the area, Hofu, Hafra and Mankara, were right in front of me, taking my breath away. Dreaming of the moment I would see the pyramids in close proximity, we took a taxi that brought us to a place where we could rent horses. When we arrived there, I wanted to leave right away—the smell of horses, irritating flies, and people trying to convince me to take their horses was too much for me. Luckily, we left the place. I will never be able to get rid of the impressions I had on the way to the pyramids.

We rode through the poorest and dirtiest area of Cairo. People were living in houses next to huge garbage piles and the streets were nothing but mud and dirty water. The main transportation in this area is donkeys, horses and camels. While we were going through, men and children were yelling funny things in Arabic or broken English. Whenever our guide, Hasan, answered them back, everyone laughed.

After an hour, we reached the desert. Hasan was telling my boyfriend that he would not let me go unless I learned how to gallop. I was very afraid and begged Hasan to leave me alone. Before I knew what was happening, he slapped my horse and started screaming. My horse went crazy and started running. I was screaming and begging Hasan to stop the horse. Eventually he did, while laughing hysterically. He said, "The key is not to be afraid, but to try to enjoy." I told him I would be willing to try again later.

Soon, we reached a hiii where we could see the pyramids. The moment I saw the pyramids, the people on horses and camels, and the yellow desert sand shining under the bright sun, tears started rolling down my cheeks. I had feelings I did not know existed. I felt as if I knew the area and the pyramids, that nothing was new to me. We came closer to the pyramids and took a lot of pictures.

Defne at the pyramids.

that we ended up buying a lot of souvenirs. At night, our new friends from the group, Samer and Miriam, suggested to go to a coffee shop. We drank tea and smoked hookah until sunrise. Finally, we returned to our hotel. While I was sitting and my boyfriend was bargaining with the driver, a hand reached into the taxi and tossed a piece of folded paper. I opened it and found the name and phone number from an Egyptian man that had been laying his eyes on me at the coffee shop. Miriam and I laughed really hard.

We spent our last day seeing the mummies in the museum and shopping more. We left Cairo on our third night and reached Amman after a tiring bus drive from Aqaba. I spent my last week sightseeing in Amman, going out with my boyfriend, meeting his friends and getting to know his family. I left Amman on the 24th of July, and while I was sitting in my seat in the plane, I had both sad and happy feelings. I decided that it was the best trip of my life. I had met a lot of new and different people, listened to various opinions and learned more about the Arab culture. Besides learning, I had a lot of fun and saw so many interesting things.

I said to myself, "there is nothing else like traveling in this world." It is the one and only thing that makes me happy. Then I remembered Hasan's words: "You are going to come to Cairo again, but not to see the pyramids. It is going to be for riding my horses in the desert." I definitely was going to do that.

Unfortunately, the pyramids were closed, so we could not see the inside. Hasan showed us other statues and gave us brief explanations. Then, he took us to a special spot where we could see everything. On the way there, he slapped my horse again—this time, I was not afraid.

It was a great feeling sitting on the horse, feeling the desert breeze in my face, and screaming. After taking more pictures, we returned. We thanked Hasan for the great trip and gave him $15, which was one third of what he earned monthly. He was so happy that he invited us to his house for dinner. That night we went to his house and met his family. After dinner, he took us to a place to smoke hookah.

The next day was a shopping day. We went to the city center and bargained a great deal, leaving satisfied. Everything was so cheap

Text Messaging Behind Your S.O.'s Back

Meg Gallagher
Grizzly Staff Writer

There are the conventional ways to prevent your significant other from finding out the awful truth that you may have not been as faithful as you should have been. You can tell your SO (significant other) that you are going to "stay late at the office" or that it's "boy's/girl's night out." Well, those were the old days. Cheaters have been getting a little more daring. They must love the excitement of attempting to have two relationships at once: a secure relationship and a passionate love affair. How are these high tech adulterers doing it—satellite? No, these deceivers are utilizing text messaging! Times have clearly changed as text messaging has become a cheater's best friend—or not.

Cheaters think they are so clever. Of course, when your spouse is in the room, most likely, he or she is not going to be as nosy to find out the message behind the text message beep. Your SO probably won't think twice about what you are messaging to one of your "friends." However, more and more frequently, these cheaters aren't getting away with their heinous ways. They forgot one small detail: cell phones have great memory systems; they save quite a decent amount of text messages. The utilization of this evidence is becoming the number one way of finding out a cheating spouse—divorce lawyers love this new tool as proof and magazines are warning readers. There are even magazines listing golden rules for cheaters precluding discovery of their actions!

A study by an Italian firm found that recently, nine out of ten cheating spouses have been caught due to the significant others snooping through their cell phones. Therefore, they decided to release a few helpful hints to prevent discovery. If you are a text message cheater, listen up. The number one rule of Cheating for Dummies is summed up in two simple words: erase memory! Seriously, if you think you slick enough to cheat and you don't do this, you are simply stupid.

These "modern love letters" have taken over the cheating circuit. If you are of the mind to cheat, you are most likely going to do it regardless of the availability of text messaging, but if you utilize this mechanism, at least have a little intelligence behind the act. Otherwise, you are just going to lose both your "relationship" and your "passion." Because, we all know, it is no fun to just be left with your "passion," as your "passion" will become your "relationship." And, he or she is already aware of these "modern love letters." What are you going to do now? "Once a cheater, always a cheater," so, unless technology advances to adhere to your cheating ways, you might be stuck as a one woman man or vice versa. Until then, happy text messaging.

GUSTER: Having Fun Being Young

Ellen Calhoun
Grizzly Staff Writer

It's not only big name music groups like the Dave Matthews Band that attract college students, specifically from Ursinus, to venture off campus for a change up the pace. On Saturday night many students turned up at the Festival Pier in Philadelphia for the Guster concert.

The show was great. Personally, I am not a huge Guster fan. However I like what I've heard, so I figured it was worth it to head out and do something different. The band's energy on stage was definitely high and they had a great time together and with the audience. They are the kind of group whose music sounds live like it does on the CD. Lots of people were singing along; they apparently knew all the songs.

Senior Matt Simeone was at the concert that night and is a long time Guster fan. He had a great time and was very positive about the evening. He said: "The show was amazing, especially since we snuck our way up to about 10 feet from stage. They played many songs from their new album "Keep It Together" which I think is their best album to date. I had never been to a concert at the Festival Pier in Philly, but I thoroughly enjoyed the venue. However, there was one thing about the venue that disturbed me: The fact that they were selling pizza smoothies. As tasty as it sounds, I just kept thinking, what is a pizza smoothie? Anyway, the set list was great; they played a variety of songs from all 3 of their older albums. With all of the other UC heads that were there plus the amazing concert, it was an excellent way to spend my Saturday evening."

In addition to pizza smoothies, there were a couple of other odd things about the night. For starters, the pre-concert scene that most people are accustomed to was severely lacking due to the fact that the "event staff" limited any tailgating. If you were in the parking lot you had to stay in your car or be en-route to the line to get in. Therefore, there was lots of sitting in cars preparing for the show.

Another interesting aspect of the night was the huge amount of younger kids at the show. Their presence created a different atmosphere. Although Guster is not "mainstream," they have a huge fan base in high schools, and lots of these age students were out for the show. Because they were young and inexperienced in the concert setting, many of them were accompanied by parents. You could spot these chaperoning adults anywhere in the crowd. Unlike the fans of the older generation who were there to enjoy themselves, these parents stood still, most with their arms crossed, staring at their watches while their adolescent children danced like maniacs (in a somewhat inappropriate manner) to the band.

Aside from the random flavored smoothies, lack of excitement in the parking lot, and a plethora of out of control youths, it was a fantastic night. And in addition to great memories from the evening, I can take away from the experience the notion that it's a great idea to get off campus now and then and take a chance on something random. If nothing else, there will be a story or two to tell the next day.

Dave Matthews Debut Solo Album 'Some Devil'- Remarkable

Monica Delaney
Grizzly Staff Writer

"Oh my God/ Wait and see/ what will soon become of me." Well, Dave, we have waited, and boy, have we seen. This line echoes from 'So Damn Lucky,' the second track on the debut solo album of Dave Matthews called 'Some Devil', which is simply extraordinary. His amazing vocals coupled with his exceptional writing capability create a euphoric listening experience. Another skill that made this project soar is Matthews' talent for combining good musicians. This ability emerged when he created the Dave Matthews Band in 1991, which happened just by watching individual performers make music while he tended bar, and then inviting them all to work together. His success continues to this day and is evident in 'Some Devil.'

What do the fans here at Ursinus think? T.J. Shaughnessy said, "The various artists collaborating on the album, although it may seem a 'musical stew' of different genres to the untrained ear, their perfect harmony makes this debut of Dave Matthews more than him and his guitar." Well said. The fact is: Trey Anastasio of Phish, Tim Reynolds, a regular partner of Dave's, as well as plenty of new combinations, such as The Seattle Music Group and The Dirty Dozen Brass Band have made quite a unique sound. John Cicchetti said that "Dave Matthews gracefully steps into the light with this brilliantly soulful solo album." I agree. As far as I am concerned, what Dave Matthews fan wouldn't? Well Rolling Stone, one of my favorite magazines, really disappointed me with their review of this incredible album. Staff writer David Fricke gave it three stars out of five, but from his write up, he portrays a thoroughly disappointed reaction. [Although, his references to Everyday (2001) (which was the least popular DMB release among most true fans) as having a "bombshell sheen" deducted some points of credibility for Fricke in my book.] Anyway, this is Dave Matthews...not the band. We should not be expecting any previous album, certainly not Everyday at that. Fricke goes on to make references about certain tracks, which I find marvelous, to be "appealing but fleeting." Some specifics of these fleeting appeals according to Fricke are:

"The Dirty Dozen Brass Band's mooring horns in 'Dodo'; the neo-Radiohead psychosis in 'Too High'; the subtle bursts of Jerry Garcia-like guitar in 'So Damn Lucky', courtesy of Trey Anastasio."

This is completely absurd. The Dirty Dozen Brass band does play on 'Dodo' which is completely original and harmonious. As far as the Radiohead reference on 'Too High'? Completely uncalled for. It is far from a psychosis, more like hypnosis. And the mention of Jerry Garcia? Well, to be in one of the few great jam bands left making music, I'm sure Dave would be nothing shy of flattered, especially since the Grateful Dead are known for being an influence on DMB. Trey plays on five of the Some Devil tracks, and this is one of the great blends of musicality that I mentioned before that has made this task a triumph. If you are a Dave Matthews fan and have read the Rolling Stone review, I urge you to disregard it, and (if you haven't already) go spend ten dollars on Some Devil. I assure you...you won't be disappointed. All fourteen tracks are phenomenally filled with Dave's trademark voice of soul. The good news is that a bonus CD is attached which is outstanding. [It is just some live Matthews and Reynolds tracks, but they never fail.] The entire 'Some Devil' CD comes together as a stunning point in Matthews' livelihood, and ensures that even if the band and their heavy touring life can't prevail forever, Matthews' career as a singing/songwriting/guitar-playing musician indeed will.

THE LIFE OF DAVID GALE: A Must See

Crystal McCarney
Grizzly Staff Writer

Director-Producer Alan Parker and producer Nicolas Cage, filmmakers behind The Life of David Gale, managed a tricky task - to make a movie that's about the death penalty, yet not to use such an opportunity to preach one side or the other. The focus of the movie is not on the moral correctness or incorrectness of the death penalty, but on whether the American judicial system can be manipulated. The foundation of The Life of David Gale is about plot, not politics.

Charles Randolph's screenplay is a masterpiece, and its structure is set up so that viewers must pay careful attention. Nearly every detail, no matter how seemingly irrelevant, is important. The plot includes a strong use of flashbacks mixed in the great amount of time spent in the present tense of the story. With this in mind, the events that unfold throughout the movie are not spelled out for the viewers, and a little bit of logic is necessary in order to sort everything out.

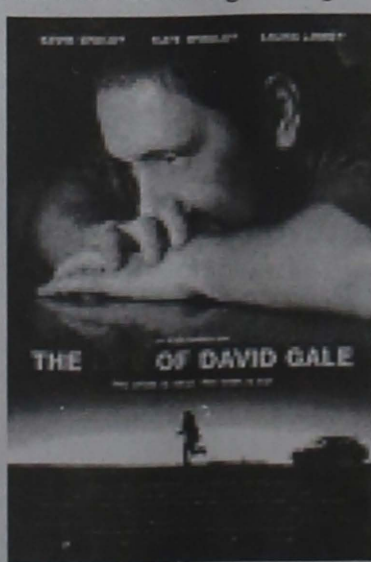

Dr. David Gale (Kevin Spacey), an ex-philosophy professor at a major Texas university, is on death row for the 1994 rape and murder of a woman named Constance Harraway (Laura Linney). Connie and David worked together for an anti-death penalty group, Death Watch, but his career took a steep plunge for the worst after one of his female students, Berlin (Rhona Mitra), had sex with him and then claimed that it was non-consensual. When Connie was found dead, the evidence pointed to David, and, thanks to the seeming careless nature of his lawyer, Braxton Belyeu (Leon Rippey), he ended up on death row. We get the sense that David is a flawed human being, but not a bad one. He is an intellectual who has fallen into a trap he can't escape. We're never quite sure whether he's the manipulator or the victim. Is he guilty or has he been framed by radical right-wingers? Or is the truth something else?

Three days before his last meal, he decides to meet with hot-shot New York reporter Bitsey Bloom (Kate Winslet), whose reputation is that she tells her stories fairly and by the book. Over the course of three two-hour sessions, he tells her the entire story, and, as his narrative progresses, she becomes convinced that he was framed. Winslet's American accent may be sloppy, but her performance is not. She's convincing as Bitsey - part bloodhound, part Sherlock Holmes. However, once David is done speaking with her, she and her intern Zack (Gabriel Mann), have less than 24 hours in which to prove him innocent.

The film's success lingers on Gale's passionate belief in the immorality of the death penalty. As a viewer you don't have to share the belief, but you have to acknowledge that it is central to his moral code. Recognition of this allows the screenplay's twists and turns to appear more credible than they might otherwise appear. The Life of David Gale is a smart film and keeps audiences off-balance and entertained for the running length. The film is enhanced by examining the same questions that many people privately consider concerning the death penalty, and by the fact that it doesn't insult us by pretending to have a better answer than the one each of us has privately reached. With conventional ambitions, The Life of David Gale is a cut above the average brain-dead thriller. Trust me, you will be glad that you didn't see the ending coming.

Name of Sculpture: Temple
Artist: Mary Ann Unger
Date: 1986

Fact: This sculpture was previously painted red. It is made out of aluminum and was the first outdoor sculpture placed on Ursinus campus. Unger described it as "a constant dialogue between the figurative and the architectural, the private and the public".

Student Reaction: Junior, Sarah Kauffman: "The main reason that I enjoy this sculpture is that it is interactive (you can sit in it). It is almost like a shelter but at the same time it is not because it is open. It directs you to look upwards which may imply spirituality but does not have a religious purpose. It is peaceful looking and calm and may direct your mind to higher thoughts."

MOVIE REVIEWS:

The School Of Rock

Take ONE:

Kyle Kauffman
Grizzly Staff Writer

Paramount pictures presents, Jack Black in a comedy about a loser and wannabe musician Dewey Finn (Black) hooked on his dream of making it as a rocker in The School of Rock. After blowing yet another gig for his band, they decide to kick Dewey Finn out of the band he put together. As if that was not bad enough, he is also being pestered by his roommate (Mike White) and stuck-up girlfriend (Sarah Silverman) to fork over unpaid rent money. With fear of being a nobody and losing his apartment, he decides to act as if he were his roommate and pretend to be a substitute teacher at a prestigious private school in order to earn a little money. In the mean time, he sees musical talent in most of his fifth grade students and therefore turns the class into a set of hardcore rockers in order to participate in a local battle-of-the-bands contest, those that are not in the band help out by designing the lighting scheme, costume designs, band managers, and of course groupies; all while sneaking behind the principal's (Joan Cusack) back. The students along with the guidance of Dewey mischievously sound proof the classroom so that no authoritative figures can hear the endless band practices that occur throughout the day. They also set up surveillance cameras in the halls and around the classroom to inform them of any unwanted activity plaguing their classroom. According to www.movies.go.com, The School of Rock received four out of five stars; I would have to agree with this. Jack Black gave an amazing high voltage performance that kept me laughing just about the entire time. His energy lit up the screen and kept me wanting more. This was proved by the fact that just about everyone remained in the theater until the credits were completely finished. Not to mention that the theater was filled to a descent capacity especially for a Sunday at 12:00, ranging from people of all ages. One critic said it seemed to be Sister Act meets Dangerous Minds. Where as I would not go that far as to say that, I would say the film was a little far fetched, but personally I would expect nothing less from such a jokester like Jack Black. Another part of the film that amazed me was the children cast to be in the band. They not only had great acting ability for ten year olds, but their musical talent is out of this world. Zach (Joey Gaydos Jr.) plays a shy and nerdy kid whose ability on the guitar is amazing to say the least. In the film, Dewey takes this timid boy and turns him into a kid who is not afraid to speak his mind and perform in front of his parents and a huge crowd. Along with Zach, is Tomika (Maryam Hassan) who plays an even more sheltered overweight girl who is too concerned with her weight and being accepted by everyone else that she does not realize what a true gift she has. With the help of the ever so confident Dewey, he makes Tomika realize that no one cares about her weight and that once she projects her beautiful and soulful voice for everyone to hear, she will realize that not everyone is superficial and people will love her for who she truly is and the talents she has to offer. When speaking of this film, Roger Ebert stated it best when he said, "here is a movie that proves you can make a family film that's alive and well-acted and smart and perceptive and funny—and that rocks!" Jack Black Rules, go check out The School of Rock!

Take TWO:

Jonathan Yoder
Grizzly Staff Writer

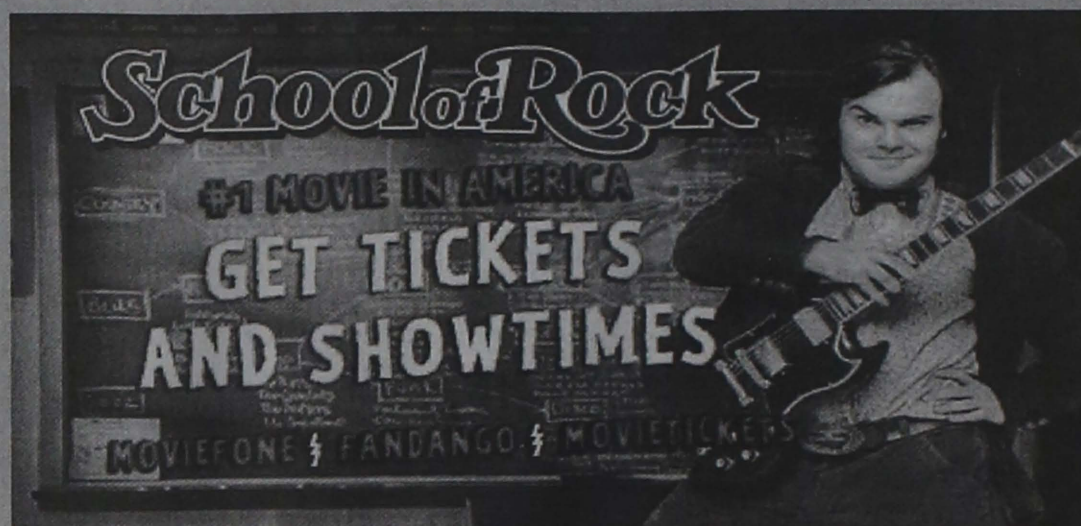

Wow! This was the first word out of my mouth after seeing "The School of Rock" starring the one and only Jack Black. Upon entering the theater I had my doubts, especially now that it costs $8.75 to see a movie. However, "The School of Rock" is an amazingly funny movie that has you entranced the whole time. It's not your typical comedy. It's actually a buffet.

However this buffet, unlike Wisner, has everything you've ordered.

The casting for this movie was seemingly perfect. The role was written for Black and he nailed it. Also, the kids are amazing. The casting team did their homework as they scoured the country for 11 and 12 year-olds with musical and theatrical talent. And they found it.

The School of Rock is truly a film for everyone. It's outrageously funny and the fun doesn't end until the janitor comes in to clean for the next showing. I haven't enjoyed a movie some much in a long time; a movie of this caliber has been long over due. So, if you want to laugh, smile and be truly entertained then do yourself a favor...take a break from the books and go to "The School of Rock".

Underworld

Michael Martynko
Grizzly Staff Writer

I'll put it to you the same way that The Rock's character tells people in what thankfully will not be a lame catchphrase used by all. You have two options here, Option A: Go see this movie and shoot yourself in the foot. Option B: Tell me where you live and I'll go shoot you in the foot. I can't say enough bad things about this movie but I will sure try. The Rundown is big on action and lite on plot, substance, characters, and anything else that makes a movie a movie to be seen. Dwayne Johnson (the best part of the movie and the only thing that stopped me from walking out), perhaps better known as his alter ego of the Rock in WWE, plays a retrieval expert who simply goes by Beck.

He works for a loan shark that supposedly gets one last job trying to find the loan shark's son named Travis Walker, played by Sean William Scott of the American Pie movies. So Beck travels to a remote slave mining city named El Dorado somewhere in Brazil to locate Travis and bring him back home. Things seem to be going smoothly until Hatcher (Christopher Walken), the man who runs El Dorado, doesn't want to let Beck take Travis back because Travis knows the location of a priceless artifact. From there Beck and Travis "escape" only to be lost in the jungle where situations arise. They range from a bunch of horny monkeys attacking them, to rebels beating up on the WWE superstar. Rosario Dawson plays the beautiful rebel leader who is trying to take down Hatcher and restore freedom to her people. In order to do this she needs the artifact that only Travis knows how to find. The movie itself tries to run from action-comedy to the very serious notion of using natives as slaves, and their struggle for independence.

Obviously the writer of this terrible excuse for a movie did not proofread or bother to even read the script after it was finished. Do yourself a favor and go with Option C: Trick someone into renting this movie for you if you really need to see it.

Underworld clocks in at over two hours long and let me just say that it runs one hour too long. I honestly did not expect much from a vampire/werewolf movie but, with Blade having done a pretty good job, I expected a little better. The setting, or lack of, is poor because for the life of me I can't figure out what city or country this movie takes place in. Accents ranged from German, to English, to French, to American. None of the sets themselves really blew me away. Kate Beckinsale plays a beautiful vampire by the name of Selene who hunts werewolves because of a generational long feud between the two races. When she discovers that a human can end the feud between the two races she must make a choice. The human is named Michael Corvin played by Scott Speedman, who is perhaps best recognized for his work on the Felicity TV series.

The movie does have a rich back story to it, but isn't interesting enough to hold your interest after you learn how everything ties together. Like every other action movie made today the action borrows heavily from the Matrix, but it does add some flair of it's own to it. Too bad the action is the best part of the movie. You won't recognize the other actors but in the end it doesn't really matter because Kate Beckinsale is the only one who will stick in your mind. Even the end battle falls really short of expectations, in that a creature of vampire and werewolf blood who is supposed to be much stronger than either race can't even defeat a Vampire Elder by himself. This is definitely a rental at best; the action is good, the acting bad, and the movie too long.

Matchstick Men

Nicole Frates
Grizzly Staff Writer

Nicholas Cage puts on an Oscar worthy performance in "Matchstick Men" as Roy Waller, a con artist who suffers from obsessive-compulsive disorder, agoraphobia- an irrational fear of public or open spaces, and panic attacks. This crime/ comedy film delves into the lives of Roy and Frank (Sam Rockwell), partners that con innocent people day in and day out. Until, out of the blue, Roy meets the daughter he never knew he had, Angela (Alison Lohman). Roy has three intricate sides to his character. He is ultimately faced with secretly detaining his profession, keeping his OCD under control, and becoming a father figure. All this rolled into 115 minutes makes for a hilariously intense experience.

This movie is about con men and a con game. There are many elements of the film that I must not disclose, but I can tell you the plot. Frank has been waiting patiently for Roy to prepare for a big money scam. They pinpoint a wealthy man, Frechette (Bruce McGill) who might be interested in laundering British money that Roy and Frank provide. Roy's daughter, after learning that her father is a successful con-man, wants to learn the trade. She then becomes involved in this elaborate scam that throws the audience in a state of suspense.

Brothers Ted and Nicholas Griffin (who excelled on the "Ocean's 11" remake) adapted "Matchstick Men" from the novel by Eric Garcia, and the film is directed by Ridley Scott. Scott has directed many critically acclaimed films. He has a resume boasting 2001's "Hannibal" and "Black Hawk Down" and 2000's hit, "Gladiator". He does a magnificent job of directing this cast.

Cage effectively portrays his character throughout the movie. It is hilarious to watch him with his tics and mannerisms.

The characters were perfectly cast, convincing us of their roles throughout the film. Rockwell and Lohman are excellent secondary characters that deserve an Academy nod. In its opening weekend at the box office it debuted at number two. During the weekend of September 21st the movie grossed $7.6 million, and $24 million since its opening. Will they pull it off? Will Angela and Roy become a family? You'll laugh, you'll cry, you'll gasp, or maybe even scoff at it being predictable. Go see it and make your own decision. "Matchstick Men" is playing at the Regal Cinema in Oaks. Showtimes are 1:25, 4:30, 7:25 and 10:15.

Halloween Fun Around Collegeville

Lauren Melton
Grizzly Staff Writer

Many Ursinus students look forward to Halloween each year, but living in such a small town as Collegeville can prove to make finding that prove spook-worthy and fun:

Picture this: castle-like walls rise 30 feet in the air and you are trapped inside eleven square acres of state penitentiary. Well, this is the scene each year at the 165 year old Eastern State Penitentiary. The guards look quite anxious...

you make will affect your fate. Visit www.easternstate.com for more info.

The Bates Motel is located in Gradyville, PA. It is equipped with a haunted motel, a hunted cornfield, and a haunted forest, through which you tour on a hayride and are thrilled and chilled for twenty-three minutes by some thirty different creeps, goblins, and ghouls. Price-wise, this isn't that expensive of an attraction, especially for a night of fun. You can enter the motel, the cornfield maze, and take a spooky hayride for $25.00. Visit www.thebatesmotel.com for more info.

In Warwick County Park, located in Pottstown, there will be spooky stories, hayrides, and refreshments served for FREE from 7-9pm on Oct. 24th. Call (610) 469-1916 for more information.

The Chadds Ford Historical Society is sponsoring the Great Pumpkin Event from Oct. 23rd to Oct. 25th from 5-9pm. There will be local artists carving huge pumpkins right on the farm, and on Friday and Saturday nights, there will be personal pumpkin carving and lighting, with prizes given for the best jack-o-lantern! Admission is only $2.00 and refreshments will be served, live music played, and hayrides. Visit www.chaddsfordhistory.org for more information.

Every year right on campus there is the Musser Halloween Party. It costume contest, and all around fun, at no cost! And it's right here on campus.

And for those of you who don't want to venture far, you always can just go trick-or-treating. It's quite fun, and the residents of Collegeville are generally receptive of the college students, so have fun, stay safe, and have a great time this Halloween!

The Eger Gateway

Lauren Perotti
Grizzly Editor-in-Chief

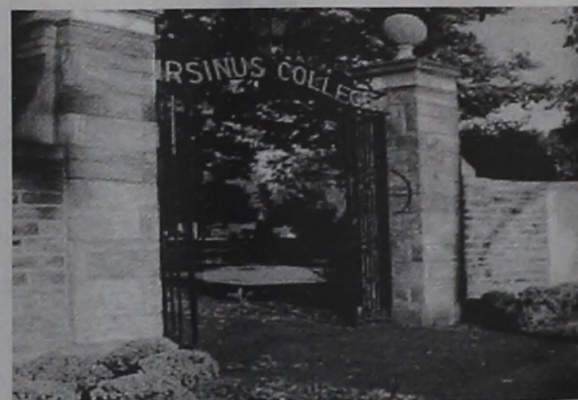

The Eger Gateway guards the path to the Myrin Library. Considered to be the physical symbol of the college, the gateway was erected in 1925 with funds from George P. Eger, father of Sherman A. Eger, class of 1925. The gateway was constructed from Chestnut Hill stone, which would also be used in other buildings on campus.

Dr. J.H. Bierman of Reading made the presentation speech at the dedication in the fall of 1925, and Dr. G. Leslie Omwake accepted the monument. Dr. Omwake remarked that it was a "symbol of all that was strong, beautiful, and lasting." After the dedication, the student body sang the Campus Song in the shadow of the gateway for the first time.

Of ten adomed by flowers, the two sides of the gateway bear inscriptions. When facing the monument from Main Street, the right hand side dedicates the gateway to Mr. Eger; when facing the left hand side, the inscription bears the history of the college until 1925.

(Inscription on right hand side of monument)

The Ursinus College Field Hockey Team went two-for-two on the week edging out McDaniel College and Franklin and Marshall.

The Bears remain undefeated in the Centennial Conference.

Last Tuesday, the Bears faced Franklin and Marshall on their home field.

The Bears ended the game with a 2-1 victory in Centennial Conference field hockey action.

Jess Shellaway and Ashley Ettinger each scored a goal leading the team to the win.

Shellaway's goal came only two minutes into the game, taking a feed from Kristen Pearson.

Ettinger added an unassisted goal with 20:31 left in the game.

F & M's only goal was scored by Lindsey Mummert.

Ursinus was strong, out-shooting F & M, 30-10.

The Bear's goalie, JoAnne Barbieri recorded four saves while F & M's goalie, Michelle Altman made 22 saves.

Coming off of one win, Ursinus was geared up, traveling to McDaniel College.

The two nationally ranked teams, No. 10 McDaniel and No. 17 Ursinus were tied at the game's end.

Joyce Anne Koubaroulis scored the Bears first goal with 8:01 left in the first half.

Four minutes later, McDaniel's Kristin Talarovich found the back of the cage to tie the game.

Ettinger scored, with 8:39 left in overtime leading to Bears to another victory.

Barbieri registered six saves for the game.

The wins improve the Bears to 4-0 in the conference and 7-3 overall for the season.

The two Centennial Conference wins will follow the Bears to Rowan on Wednesday.

The Bears will then return home on Saturday to face Haverford.

Game time is set for 12:00pm.

Women's Soccer Continue to Impress

The women's soccer team took on the Shorewomen of Washington college Tuesday, September 30th in a Centennial Conference match.

The women dominated play right from the start. Lauren Washam gave the bears (3-2, 7-3-3) a one goal lead 8:13 into the game.

The game remained tied, but Ursinus dominated play out shooting Washington 16-3, and held a 9-1 advantage in corner kicks.

It wasn't till 7:30 left in the game that Lauren Talty scored an insurance goal to put the Bears up by two goals, allowing them to walk away with a win.

After beating Washington College, the women moved on to play conference rivals Johns Hopkins on Saturday, October, 4th.

Hopkins entered the game 1-1 in the conference, trailing Ursinus who was 3-1.

The game was Back and forth, but Hopkins hopped on the board first netting a goal in the 29th minute.

The game remained tied till the second half, when Aubrey Andre tied the game in the 69th minute off a feed from Krista Smith.

With the game tied, Hopkins and Ursinus continued to battle with both sides creating dangerous chances.

Then in the 74th minute, Hopkins pulled ahead to make it 2-1.

Ursinus continued to battle hoping to tie the game back up and take it to overtime, but Hopkins tacked on their third goal in the 90th minute to pull away and take home the conference win.

Cara Goldberg made four saves for the bears in the loss.

Although losing to Hopkins, your Ursinus women are 7-3-2 overall, 3-2 in the Centennial, and are currently third place in the conference.

Kristen Papenberg, a junior midfielder says, "Our team has a strong bond, and we are have been working pretty well together. We are all optimistic about the remainder of the season."

Come out and support the Ursinus women's soccer team as they make a run for the playoffs.

Men's Soccer Trying to Battle

Jon Herting

As the week came to a close your men's team came out with an even record of 1-1-1.

Your men's team followed the lead of sophomore Tommy Hanlin and played three tough games keeping all of them close.

The first game of the week was against winless Neumann College.

Ursinus knew however that this would not be an easy game to win.

However, 2:22 into the game, Tommy Hanlin scored his first of many goals off of an assist from Dennis Ondrejik.

Ursinus continued this trend, dominating the game, until the 21 minute when Tommy Hanlin added his second goal.

Just 2 minutes later Kevin Murphy scored the third goal of the game off of a corner kick by Corey Goldberg.

Your men's team continued to dominate the game until half time when the score was 3-1.

As the game continued Ursinus continued to dominate more and more.

Just 13 minutes into the second half Freshman Chris Hood added another tally.

In the end Tommy Hanlin would add another goal to complete the hat trick.

Ursinus won 5-2, scoring the most goals they have in three years.

On Wednesday your team continued to play hard as they took on division foe Haverford.

Haverford had a record of 4-3-2 going into the game.

The game started as two teams fought a very tough, physical game. Dirty, quick play defined this game.

With just 1:25 left in the half though Freshman Chris Hood scored off of a hard fought assist from Tommy Hanlin.

Play continued to flow quickly as Haverford capitalized twice to take the lead away from Ursinus.

After these goals however Ursinus played passionately getting the equalizer in the 84th minute from Tom Hanlin off of another goal caused by hard work.

The game then progressed through two overtimes until it would finally end with the score tied 2-2.

The week ended with Ursinus battling to a 3-1 loss to division power Gettysburg.

The game began very physically with both teams battling for control.

It wasn't until the 24th minute when Gettysburg scored off a fluke goal that was only created because of the rainy, windy conditions that would cause problems and chances for both teams.

Before half however Tommy Hanlin would cap off his tremendous week in the 40th minute off of an assist by Freshman Doug Von Allman in his first collegiate point.

The first half ended promisingly for your Ursinus team as Gettysburg narrowly escaped would be goals.

As the second half commenced, however, so did Gettysburg's attack.

They would score 2 quick goals in the 54 and 56 minute to close the scoring and the game. Sophomore Brian Berkowitz had 4 saves compared to 3 for Gettysburg's John Ward with 3. Come support your men's soccer team as the play

McDaniel at home on Saturday.

Ursinus XC Takes on Div. 1 and 2 Opponents

Aziz Shaikh

On Saturday, the Ursinus Men's and Women's Cross Country Teams competed in the 30th Annual Paul Short Open Invitational hosted by Lehigh University.

There were more than 30 teams competing in this race ranging from Division I and II schools to local running clubs.

Only eight members of the Ursinus Men's Team competed; three were out due to injury.

Only five members of the Ursinus Women's Team competed; three were out due to injury and one due to academic conflict.

Saturday wasn't too pleasant of a day to race. Conditions weren't as ideal as most runners would like.

Temperatures were in the 50s with a consistent rain falling and a slight wind.

Weather and bad footing on the course made for a dreadful day, but the Bears showed they could persevere through any conditions.

Both Men's and Women's Teams did extremely well despite the conditions.

The Men's Team competed in the 8000 meter open race.

Freshman Chris DeLeon led the way for the men once again with a season best time of 27:17.

Sophomore Joe Szymanski returned to last season's form with a season best time of 28:34.

Freshman Luke Sullivan improved his personal best time in the 8000 by 30 seconds with a time of 29:28.

Sophomore Eric Wickersham finished with a time of 30:44.

Freshman Larry Barr wasn't far behind with a time of 31:05.

Junior Aziz Shaikh finished with a season best time of 36:30.

Travis High rounded out the men with a time of 37:19.

The Women's Team competed in the 6000 meter open race.

After a month hiatus, Katie Dougherty showed she is still at the top of her game with a top ten finish in a time of 22:38.

Freshman Lynne Erickson finished with a time of 24:40 in her first collegiate 6000 meter race.

Senior Kacie Meyer was next with a time of 28:21.

Not far behind was freshman Maureen McCarthy with a time of 28:35 in her first collegiate 6000 meter race.

Freshman Misa Gareau rounded out the women with a time of 35:35 in her first collegiate 6000 meter race.

Both teams held their own and did well against Division I and II competition.

Next, the Bears will compete at the DeSales Invitational during Fall Break.

Josh Kemp: Changing the Record Books

Man's Offer to Murder Kobe Bryant's Accuser Lands Him in Jail

Ray Baker
Grizzly Sports Writer

At 5'11" 185 lbs, one would not expect Josh Kemp to be the strength player that he is, but one look at his weight room numbers (315 lb. bench, 405 lb. squat) and you might not believe he weighs what he does.

Kemp is a starting outside linebacker for the Bears who is rewriting the pages of the record books.

The significance is that he is only halfway through the season.

After 5 games this season Kemp has 11.5 sacks and 13 tackles for loss.

He has also been twice named conference defensive player of the week.

It may have been hard for one to predict this kind of year for Kemp based off of last year's statistics.

Though solid, they were not nearly as impressive as this year's numbers.

Last year as a defensive back Kemp made 41 tackles, two tackles for loss, and recovered three fumbles.

But that was at defensive back. Coming into this season, the coaches looked to increase the speed of the defense and moved Kemp down to play linebacker in their new 3-4 scheme.

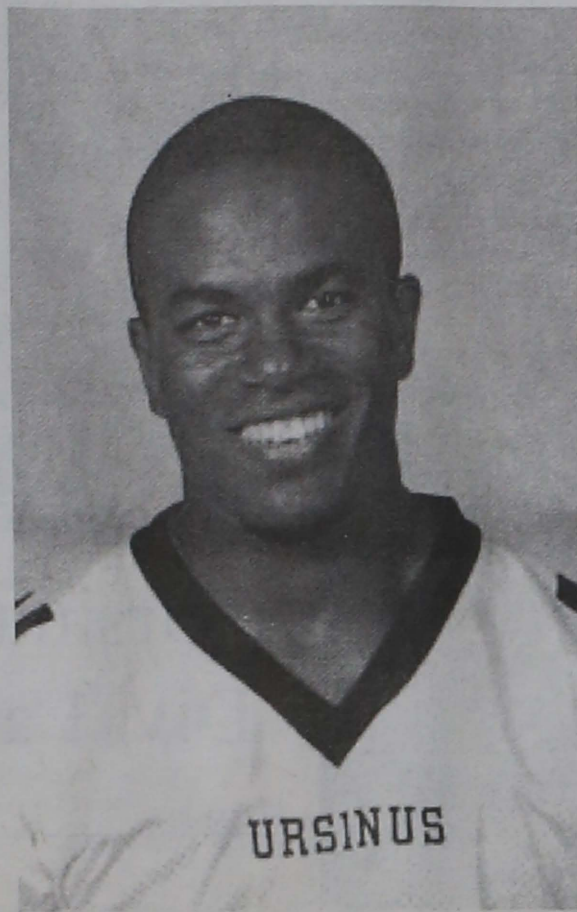

The move turned out to be a great one for not only the team but Kemp as well.

Kemp leads the nation in total sacks and is second in sacks per game.

He is also ninth in the nation in tackles for loss.

However, national statisticians are not the only ones taking note to Kemp's extraordinary play; his teammates also notice it and commend him for it.

Sophomore wide out Randy Taylor said of the move that it was "great...we lacked speed at linebacker and it didn't seem Josh was being utilized right at defensive back, so the move was great."

Though his teammates think the move is a good thing, Kemp also feels good about the move. He states, "I thank the coaches and my teammates for making the transition as successful as it is."

Though Kemp is playing LB there are still times he has to cover just as a DB would.

When questioned whether or not he felt his DB skills had diminished on account of him playing LB he said, "I still feel I can cover like a DB... I find myself matched up on number two receivers which are not as tough to cover."

With all of Kemp's success one would feel he would be complacent.

This is not the case Kemp says there are several things he would like to improve on.

"I haven't quite mastered the art of playing at the speed of linebacker... I sometimes overrun things because I am so close to the play now, and as a defensive back you aren't that close."

Other goals Kemp has are to get bigger, while maintaining his speed.

Although his transition to linebacker has been successful it hasn't always been smooth.

Josh credits his coaches Curley and Craig for providing good instruction.

He also credits teammates and fellow outside linebackers Steve Wallace and Dan Scafidi.

He says they have been very helpful at times when he may not completely understand his assignment, and also supportive of his success.

With this type of team helpfulness and support one can expect Josh and the entire Bear football team to be successful for years to come.

On September 18, 2003, a man was arrested after police say he offered to kill Kobe Bryant's accuser.

Patrick Graber, 31, was charged with solicitation to commit murder according to the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department.

Kobe Bryant, 25, is accused of raping a 19-year-old woman but he asserts they had consensual sex.

In a statement released to the press Bryant's attorneys said, "In the two months since this case became public, there have been multiple threats against Mr. Bryant, his lawyers and accuser," the statement said.

"There have been outrageously false stories claiming that Mr. Bryant has offered money to the accuser. We condemn these threats and these false stories. This atmosphere threatens not just Mr. Bryant, his lawyers and the accuser, but the fundamental right to a fair trial before an impartial jury."

Graber was arrested during a sting operation that was videotaped by undercover agents, according to Lt. Jim Taylor.

He allegedly sent a letter to Bryant saying he could help him by making his accuser "disappear."

Sheriff Lee Baca said, "The suspect agreed to carry out the act in exchange for one million dollars up front and two million dollars after the deed."

The letter was intercepted by Bryant's security team, which then notified the sheriff's department. Taylor says, "We took the threat as credible and real."

Investigators arranged to meet Patrick Graber in a parking lot where Graber thought he was receiving his first million.

Authorities told him his money was in a separate car.

As Graber went to retrieve his bag filled with movie money, he was promptly arrested. Police are searching for accomplices, but believe Graber acted alone.

Graber has a record in Switzerland for fraud.

He is currently living in the United States on a six-month-expired visa, and working as a body building coach.

Graber told investigators he was involved with "Russian organized crime."

He also told police that he wouldn't do the murder himself, but that he knew how to get it done.

He claimed it could be "done within a week," and that he knew the accuser's family.

Patrick Graber's arraignment was held on September 22nd.

Kobe Bryant's pretrial motions hearing will be held October 9.

Ok Eagles fans now you can breathe.

With just over a minute left in the fourth quarter of the Eagles-Redskins game, the Redskins made a heart-thumping comeback that had us all gasping for air.

After successfully completing a 53-yard field goal to make the score 27-19 in favor of the Eagles, John Hall and the rest of the Redskins special teams set in an onside kick formation.

After successfully completing the onside kick and then making a touchdown, the Redskins found themselves two points away from tying the score.

In an attempt to take the game into overtime, the Redskins tried for a two point conversion but failed in an overthrown pass.

The Eagles defense put on the pressure and closed the game with an ending score of 27-25.

In the end, the Eagles cared about the "W" and evened out their record to 2-2.

Their win over their NFC rival, the Washington Redskins, was their first win at the Lincoln Financial Field.

Next week, the Eagles face off with the Dallas Cowboys in Dallas.
