We found a parking place in front of the office yesterday, in broad daylight.

If the weather situation keeps up, we are going to lose faith in the weatherman.

He has promised showers for the past week and as far as we know there haven't been any.

At any rate we will continue to water the young trees in the yard until he comes through with more tangible evidence.

Our apologies to Dr. Hart. He came in to tell us about a little spotted pup that came to his house, and we never did mention it.

The latest is a book entitled "Revitalizing a Nation," which is a statement of beliefs and opinions in the public announcements by MacArthur. The book has 24 pages of photographs of MacArthur in various poses.

Could be part of another boom to draft him. Otherwise why should it be coming out.

New letter from Mrs. Beatrice S. Wallace, who is editor of the Cadiz Record.

Mrs. Wallace wants to reprint the story we had about Mr. and Mrs. T. O. Turner.

Mr. Turner lived in Trig county for many years.

This date last year: Air Force statistics showed the United States had lost 308 planes in the Korean War to 49 Communist planes destroyed or damaged. The European payments upon ended its first year with satisfactory operations in repayments in Europe.

This date in history: Sebastian Cabot touched the shore of North America in 1497. And the first land engagement in the Spanish-American War was fought in 1898.

Truck passing by with the name Ted Schill, horses and hay, on the side. Off hand we would say these are two related lines.

Ed Frank Kirk will soon move into his new building where the Superior Laundry and Cleaners was.

Ed Frank has such good taste in colors, we can't wait to see what he will use on the front.

Through some mistake, Ed Frank left about a square foot on the front of the old building without a sign of some sort.

Says he will see that the front of the new one will be completely covered.

All the kids went down to see Frank Lancaster's show yesterday. Jack and the Beautifal.

For some reason they all wanted to tell us about it when they got home.

Boys Go On Exploring Trip, Picnic

The Junior Boys and their Sunday School teacher, Paul Kinkins of the First Methodist Church held a picnic and explorer's trip near Tabaccoport in Stewart County, Tenn., on Saturday. The group explored the Salt-Peter Cave which is a large cave that was used by the Confederates during the Civil War to get salt-peter, to make gun powder. A mock war was held by the boys. They chose out sides for the two troops, Yankees and Rebels. In a large section of the cave the boys held a war dance. The noon picnic lunch was spread in the cave. A watermelon feast was held in the afternoon after which the group visited Shady Spring said to be the second coldest spring in the state of Tennessee. Boys attending were class members—Jimmy Boyd, Harold Moss, Bill Young, Harry Sparks, Jr., Larry Buxton, Hal Hadden, Vernon Shaw Stubblefield, Billy McLemore, Morris Hadden, Ted Sykes, Jimmy Cross, MacArthur Fitts, Donnie Henson, Ronnie Henson, Harold Hurt, Bob Goss, Jr., and Buddy Farris. Billy Kopperud was a visitor.

Woman In Mental Hospital Sixteen Years By Mistake

A Michigan judge says the state erred when it placed a woman in a mental hospital. The woman herself calls it a 16-million-dollar mistake. Miss Mary Speers invented a rumble seat for her 1938 Shb says she traveled from Washington to Detroit to discuss her patent with the automobile industry. The inventor got into difficulty over a check Doctors ruled that she was suffering from "delusions of grandeur and wealth." She was sent to a mental hospital. Miss Speers—now 72-years-old says she will sue the state for 16-million-dollars. She says the amount is a mere trifle for what she has been through.

QUESTION Can anyone overcome stage fright, what would you suggest as a good method for overcoming stage fright? ANSWERS— Bill Whitwell: Continue the appearance, and I suppose just about anyone could overcome stage fright. Thomas Houston: Just get up there more I guess. I guess anyone can overcome stage fright. Mrs. Merlin Washer: Yes, I think the more you are in front of people the more you are going to overcome it. I think it will work for most people but of course, there might be some people who never would overcome stage fright. Mrs. Mary Carr: I think it is kinda like nervousness if you practice against it enough nearly everyone can overcome it. Mrs. Allen Wells: Yes, I believe they can. I have been in plays quite a bit and at first I'd always be frightened, but I would get over it in a few minutes—I would just try to forget being scared and think more about what I was doing and try to do my very best.

Largest Convention Of JCC's Being Held In Dallas, Texas

DALLAS, Texas, June 24 (UP)—Six thousand young men and women have been gearing it up over the week end, going into business today—the business of staging the biggest national convention in the history of the United States Junior of Commerce. Three thousand delegates to the Jaycees' 22nd annual business conference registered yesterday, including an Oklahoma delegation in full Indian regalia. The remaining 3,000, including a delegation of Nevadans with 15,000 silver dollars in their pockets, registered today at the week-long convention began. On Friday, those silver dollars will be scattered among the crowds which gather to watch the Jaycees' parade. The highlight of the convention will come on Friday, after the election of officers. Two Democratic presidential contenders, Senator Edna Kefauver of Tennessee and Senator Richard Russell of Georgia—will address the Jaycees' inaugural banquet. Before after- and in-between, there will be a smattering of other serious business and four days of parties, dinners, dances, stunts and parades. The Oklahoma delegation has elected a trope in the lobby of one of the two downtown Dallas hotels which have been given over solely to the Jaycees for the week. There will be an Oklahoma chicken leg party, a Virginia ham and biscuit party, a South Carolina shrimp and beer party, a Florida orange juice party, a Kentucky mint julep party, a Louisiana shrimp party, an Illinois hot dog and beer party and a Wisconsin cheese party. Missouri prefers to be mysterious. That state will hold a surprise party. Each host delegation will serve the delicacies of its own state to the wandering party-goers.

Prize Winning Editorial

An editorial entitled "Sanity May Prevail," that appeared in the Paris Post-Intelligencer August 29, 1951, was judged the best editorial of the year in the Tennessee Press Association newspaper contests. The winning editorial, which was written by W. P. Williams, of the Ledger & Times and who writes many of the editorials for this paper, is reprinted from the Post-Intelligencer's August 29 issue as follows:

SANITY MAY PREVAIL

Dorothy Thompson, a woman columnist who writes on serious subjects, thinks the War in Korea has taught some valuable lessons to both Communists and non-Communists that may cause the undeclared war to be listed by historians as a "post war convulsion" brought on by World War Two, rather than the battle of World War Three.

The lesson is one that hasn't been learned by five thousand years of conflict—that war can't pay—but there has never been proof of it so clearly revealed as has been the case in Korea. If the United Nations win we will be right back where we started June 25, 1950, and if the Communists win they will take over South Korea which will prove their biggest headache to date and not worth a fraction as much as it would have been when they first crossed the 38th parallel.

She believes that Communists are making comparisons of the ruin in Korea with the shambles that Western Europe would be in case of World War Three, to say nothing of destruction to their own cities by the atomic bomb, and she thinks United Nations leaders are likewise counting the cost of "liberating" a small country like Korea and deciding the cure is many times as destructive as the disease.

Our military leaders have been telling us ever since believe we will have the right kind of peace until love overcomes that fear in the hearts of men everywhere, but it is possible that fear can prevent actual hostilities, until love has a chance to spread on an international scale. And there are growing indications that it is spreading.

Veterans of the Korean War are telling us they have experienced some strange things in that unhappy land. Chinese prisoners captured are not in the least afraid of us as their leaders would like for them to be. They actually seem to have a friendly feeling towards Americans, and when they capture our men they are inclined to treat them decently if their officers permit them to do so.

A heart to heart talk with almost any G. I. will reveal a remarkable absence of the principal ingredient of a war machine—hate. The present generation of American boys have been taught to love Chinamen, not to hate them, and the recent resolutions passed by Congress expressing love and fellowship towards the people of Russia is an indication that older men, too, are short on the ingredient.

We don't think there is the slightest doubt, but what stunts would start aggressions similar to Korea in any of a dozen spots if we thought he had any chance to win, but a man who will do what he has consistently done for thirty years to avoid a fight is not as likely to start a world war as Hitler was.

Included in Stalin's background is a sentence to the Siberian salt mines for bank robbery and the cold-blooded murder of a defenseless wife, so say nothing of the millions he has enslaved and put to death. That kind of character is a coward, and will never fight on equal terms.

It takes the character of a rat to be a robber, or a murderer. A rat is sometimes good on defense, as Stalin was in his own country when it was invaded. He didn't do so hot in tiny Finland, but he did so well in any state he occupied, including East Germany.

By comparison the United States has done very well indeed, even in Germany and Japan, and there is reason to believe if we had any leadership, we would do even better.

The BOOK of the CRIME by ELIZABETH DALY

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX
"WE SOUND like a herd of elephants," said Gamage as the group descended into the basement. "I'll say we do." Nordhall eyed him quizzically through the basement dusk.
They went into one of those long basement rooms with a barred window and wainscoting, the kind of room that New Yorkers of moderate income used to take their meals in. It now contained a covered pool table, markers, and a rack of cues. Against the end wall stood an obsolete marble-topped sideboard in light oak, with glasses and bottles on its upper shelves and cupboards below. Sergeant Ryder leaned against one end of this, and took out a notebook. Nordhall faced his witness in the light from the window; Gamage sat on the broad window-seat, looking out across the area at the basement gate.
"Now let's see," said Nordhall. "We understand from a member of the family that this was the place where all the liquor was, and that you got the cocktails ready down here every day."
"I had the keys to everything," said Nordhall. "I was in charge of this place, and you might say I was in charge of the house."
"Naturally you were. And cocktails were served by you up in the library at half-past six, unless the family were playing pool down here."
"They'd drop in here for an extra drink when they felt like it, besides. But they preferred their cocktails up in the library, as a general thing."
"And you used these basement stairs."
"It was easier for me to be out of the kitchen and pantry, and away from the dining room at that hour. The other girl would be setting the table for dinner."
"So you had all the fixings in here." Nordhall's eyes wandered to the sideboard.
"Yes, and I'd get the canapes from the cook." She added: "And the ice."
"Lots of work, getting all that ready."
"Eat like pigs, they did."
"Eat like pigs," Nordhall repeated it with a glance at her and at Gamage that showed something besides satisfaction. Nordhall had put it all behind her, very natural.
"You'd be in here doing all this by six o'clock, would you?" he asked, watching her as he stood propped against the wall.
"Half an hour would give me plenty of time."
"You wouldn't be in here fixing cocktails a little earlier?"
"No, I would not."
"I thought you wouldn't," Nordhall sighed. "Now I'd like you just to cast your mind back to Saturday afternoon, Miss Callahan."
"One day was like another in this house."
"Oh, not lately," protested Nordhall, smiling at her. "You can't say that, can you? On Friday, late on Friday afternoon, for instance—the lady we'll call Mrs. Gray Austen, ran away. That wasn't usual."
"Norah's mouth puckered.
"And the gentleman we'll call Mr. Gray Austen," observed Gamage, "got rid of a couple of books."
"And that wasn't usual," he said Nordhall, "especially if he burned them."
"The two waited; then Norah came through obligingly: "He put them on the library fire, and I found one charred up in the ashes and the other one all gone but the cover: a cover like I'd won't burn like paper and kindling wood. I had to put a log on top of it and crush it down."
"So they're all burned up now?"
"Indeed they are: burned to ashes. And the ashes thrown in the garbage and taken away."
"Taken away. Then Saturday, Miss Callahan—you had a caller, Mr. Gamage here. Now that wasn't usual either, was it?"
"Norah gave Gamage a quick apprehensive look. "We didn't have many, that's true."
"Naturally," said Nordhall, "because somebody might just happen to get a look at Mr. Gray Austen and wonder why he wasn't Mr. Gray Austen at all, but Thomas Bayles of Edgewood, Illinois."
She eyed him sourly.
"Well, Mr. Gamage came." Nordhall went on with his questioning of Norah, "and the three of them took him up to the second-floor sitting room. Now—and his voice changed, as it always did, Gamage noted with amusement, when he left facts for probabilities—"at a little before six Jerome Austen left them, and went out of the house. But Mr. Gamage says he didn't hear the front door slam after him, which is a sound that goes pretty well over the house." He paused, and then said quietly: "So he must have gone out by the basement way—door and gate."
"Norah said nothing."
"But you weren't here at that time," conceded Nordhall. "So we're interested in when and how he got home. It would have been between six-fifteen and six-thirty, or so we figure it, because Mr. Gamage and Miss Austen left just before six-fifteen. That's the block between the corner, and Jerome Austen, for reasons of his own, wouldn't care to meet Mr. Gamage again just at that time."
"And how would the man know they'd come out then?" asked Nordhall hastily.
"Well, he'd have to watch for them."
"Norah, wrenching at her apron as if to wrench her mind along these lines, said nothing.
"So you might have noticed him come in," said Nordhall.
"He never left the basement door open all that time. I'd have felt the draught. He could have gone the other way and used his front door key."
"He could," agreed Nordhall gloomily.
"I was back and forth getting the canapes," said Norah. "I never saw or heard him come into the house at all."
"Norah gave him an evil smile.
"But if you didn't think you knew at all," she informed him, "and let me get a word in, I'd have told you that I heard him go."
"Gamage burst out laughing. "Good for you, Norah; you'll have the courtroom holding their sides, and the opposing counsel's ears red. You weren't fixing cocktails, but you were here in the basement before six o'clock just the same."
"And you heard him come down those basement stairs."
"I did. Who else would it be in this house? And I heard the gate close behind him."
"But you didn't actually see him."
"No, I was back there at the buffet, with me back to the window. I thought he was coming in here, first; to get a drop something extra before I had the tray ready. Or he might be going to practice up on his pool. Then when I heard him go past, and the gate equal to, I thought he's gone back to mail a letter. Then I went back to the kitchen and thought no more of it, and at half-past six there he was up in the library, all ready for the cocktails."
"Well," Gamage rose. "It's a big belly, Norah—I mean it's better than nothing. Don't bog your mind with it now, the sergeant has got it all down and I'm sure you'll remember it later."

Local Couple Attends At Wedding Of Miss Horton To Mr. John Allan Brussolo

On Saturday, June 21, which marked the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Forrest G. Horton of Paducah, Miss Nancy Ann Horton became the bride of John Allan Brussolo, son of Mr. and Mrs. Victor A. Brussolo of Kentfield, Calif.

The Rev. Walter Mischke performed the double ring ceremony at half past six o'clock in the evening at Broadway Methodist Church, Paducah.

Arrangements of a Magnolia dress and train of white satin and tulle with white asters and gladioli. Candelabra holding white candles were placed in groups in the church.

The bride, who was given a marriage by her father, wore a gown of imported delicately-textured and silk illusion over mesh bridal satin. The light fitting lace of the bodice scalloped over the deep gorge of illusion to form a sweet heart neckline. The long fitted lace sleeves ended in cellophane points over the hands.

The bouquet skirt which was posed over hoops held a wide triangular panel of illusion which was edged by scallops of the lace from the waist of the bodice to the floor. The lace and satin of the extremely full skirt terminated in a wide chapel length train.

The bride's full, femininely veiled illusion fell from a tiara of illusion which was edged with a design of orange blossoms and leaves fashioned from tiny seed pearls. She carried a bouquet of white Amazon lilies which was centered with a white orchid and tied with satin ribbon.

The club's next meeting will be its annual picnic at the State Park.

Coke Party And Tea Held In Compliment To Miss Nesbitt

Two parties Friday, a coke party in the morning and a tea in the afternoon complimented Miss Nancy Nesbitt of New York, fiancée of Cpl. Ernest Williams, Tenth.

Mrs. Bryan Williams entertained with a coke party in the morning at her home on Grove Blvd., Paris, Tenn.

A color note of green and white was carried out in the decorations and refreshments. Lovely gift arrangements of Magnolia lilies, white gladioli and other flowers added a gay note to the party scene. Especially attractive was the large single Magnolia in a crystal bowl on the coffee table.

White napkins with green "Aggie & Ernest" and green and white Gower mints, which were served with several different shaped open-faced sandwiches and pickle and olives, also carried out the color scheme.

Mrs. Williams was assisted in entertaining by Mrs. R. L. Turpen, Mrs. Percy Williams and Jeanette Williams.

Thirty guests called between the hour of 11:30 to 11:30.

Afternoon Tea Miss Nesbitt was complimented again Friday afternoon when Mrs. Paul Meals entertained with a buzz hotel dining room. Invited guests were: Messrs. and Mesdames Forrest G. Horton, Victor A. Brussolo, Robert O. Young, Lynn W. Porter and A. A. Martin.

Misses Karen Kennedy, Ann Carson, Mildred Smith, Phyllis Giotelly, W. V. John W. D. Toney and James Marvin.

Receiving with Mrs. Meals and Miss Nesbitt were Mrs. W. Z. Williams, mother of Cpl. Williams, and her daughters and daughter-in-law. Mrs. Meals was attired in blue crepe and lace and corsage of pink carnations. Mrs. Williams in white gladioli and corsage of white carnations. Miss Nesbitt, in blue and white silk with which wore a corsage of white carnations a gift from the hostess. Mrs. Erwin Herrmann chose yellow crepe. Mrs. Bryan Williams wore printed nylon. Mrs. Percy Williams gold shantung and Mrs. Vyron Mitchell of Fulton, Ky., beige lace.

The meals home was lovely throughout with all-white decorations.

The serving table, covered with a handmade linen and crocheted cloth, festooned with white maline tied with white satin bows, was centered with a bridal arrangement of white carnations with a miniature bride and bridegroom under an arch of white net. Graceful bouquets of white gladioli, stock and baby's breath were on the buffet and organ in dining room and a similar one was on the piano in the living room. White candles in silver holders were on each end of the buffet.

Mary and Alice Meals, in matching organdy formal, one yellow and one orchid, served the 63 guests frosted punch, individual decorated bridal cakes, party mints and nuts.

A background of appropriate music was furnished by Miss Phyllis McEvoy at the piano.

July Bride-elect Honored At Shower On Friday Evening

Miss Suzanne Miller, July bride-elect of Milton Ecker, was complimented with a miscellaneous shower Friday evening.

Hostesses were Miss Juanita Williams and Mrs. Bill Myers. The shower was held at the Williams' home on North Ninth Street.

Miss Miller wore for the occasion a brown and white printed linen dress. She was presented with a corsage of yellow carnations. Mrs. W. G. Miller, mother of the honoree, was presented a corsage of white carnations.

Punch and individual cakes were served from a table overlaid with a hand cutwork cloth.

Contest prizes were won by Miss Miller, Mrs. Voris Wells and Miss Eleanor Heater.

Glamor Girl Now Cropping Up In Business World

By United Press The business of being a glamor girl must be on shaky foundation these days.

Beauties whose face once were their fortune now are cropping up in the business world, looking for financial security.

The latest to join the ranks of glamor girls turned businesswomen is Arlene Dahl, a red-haired beauty from Hollywood who's married to movie hero Lex Barker.

Miss Dahl says, "Every actress should have some business on the side." Hers is called "Arlene Dahl Enterprises" and will sell nightgowns, pajamas, slippers and full-length nylon "Dahl" slips to cover pin curls.

SWALLOWS 40 RAZOR BLADES

William Hinkle in hospital. Inwards: light objects, blades. "I JUST ATE 40 razor blades. I've got a stomach ache," William Hinkle, Carbondale, Ill., told a taxi driver in Chicago. Taken to Cook County hospital, a fluoroscope examination revealed a pile of blades (single edge) in his stomach. He gave no reason for the metallic meal. He didn't even say whether he tasted sharp. His father said William pulled a previous swallowing stunt in Belleville, Ill. (International)
