What Are We Afraid Of?

The War in Korea is nearly three years old. For two and a half years of that time, beginning with the invasion of North Korea by the Chinese Communists, we have fought the war on the Communists' terms.

If the Communists take Old Baldy away from us it seems the unwritten law permits us to take it back at the cost of several hundred of our men. If "Chinese Reds in Russian-built MIG planes" destroy two, three or more of our planes and kill a couple of dozen of our aviators who cost more than $20,000.00 each to train, it is "cricket" for us to shoot down some MIG's, and play the news up on our front pages.

If we happen to have a winning commander like General MacArthur who rushes the Reds so fast it takes their breath, and if he offers to negotiate a truce on the field of battle, he is promptly arrested—usually through most of our people honestly believe he would have actually forced military terms on a defeated enemy.

On the other hand when a criminal Russian diplomat like Malik even hints that a truce in Korea on Russian-Chinese-North Korean terms may be possible our military authorities at the Pentagon, as well as our State Department and White House, fall all over themselves to find out what the terms are, then spend long days, weeks and months at Panmunjom to learn the Reds were playing for time and have no intention of establishing peace in Asia, either in Korea, Indo-China or Malaya.

We are repeating mistakes of 1951 as we prepare to swap 6,000 sick and wounded Chinese and North Korean prisoners of war for 120 American and 450 R. O. K. prisoners. Last week when the Reds told us they had only 120 of our sick and wounded men out of the 7,500 we have listed as "missing", we were shocked beyond belief, but we were afraid to say anything about it for fear the Reds would drop the whole exchange idea.

Now we read the news of prisoner exchange will be restricted in accordance with our enemy's wishes. Only a limited number of representatives will be allowed at Panmunjom negotiations. They will not be allowed to interview individual prisoners. They will have to ask their questions through a desk, or, if necessary, through a speaker.

Early this week, expressed for several days, that the Reds would stop in spots that have been thoroughly processed. As we restrict newspaper men because we are afraid they will report on these spots by asking them pointed questions? And why do we hesitate about interviewing them? Are we still trying to avoid offending Communists?

Ray W. Howard, president of Scripps-Howard Newspapers, writes from Honolulu yesterday that there isn't a military or diplomatic leader of the Free World between San Francisco and Hong Kong who believes the Reds are serious in negotiations now going on. They see it as a trap, and Uncle Sam is the intended victim. Why do we fall for every trap the Reds set?

THEY BACK TO THE WORKING U. S. soldiers in Korea. Here at Army Center, engineer turned lumberjack prepared to fell a tree which he says is part of the chain of pre-fabricated bunkers that now dot the Korean mountain sides. The tree soon will be on its way to the lumber factory.

Mickey Mantle Hailed As Another Ball Hitting Great

By CARL LUNQUIST
NEW YORK (AP)—The Mighty Mick of the Yankees was a grown man of the baseball world today—ready perhaps to take his place with the all-time immor-tals of the game.
That Mickey Mantle may move into the second line of succession behind Yankee slugger Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and Joe Dimaggio is no certainty, for he still is a baby, sometimes frustrated 21-year-old cross-roads kid from Commerce, Ore.
But there can be no doubt that he has the potential to be the greatest all-around slugger the game has produced, a batsman who in his career may hit a ball farther, both right-handed and left-handed, than any other man.
In Washington Friday he hit what many old-timers believe was the longest home run in the history of the game.
As the Yankees again milled the Senators 7-3, the Commerce Comet swinging right-handed against southpaw Chuck Stobbs, slashed over the left field bleachers and into a back yard in the street beyond the ball park. It was the first drive ever to clear the 35-foot high fence behind the home plate.
In addition, Mickey beat out a lead which rolled into center field and stole a base on lefty Ed Lough's misplayed 10th hit for his first run. All of the Yankee starters got hits and Billy Martin also batted as the champs made it three victories in a row.
Brooklyn split a day-night double with the Giants, losing the first game, 6-2 to "romero" Sal Maglie, but winning the slugger back on Billy Lee's effective nine hit pitching.
Maglie started out ball for 6 2 2/3 innings in the game but later required the aid of Hoyt Wilhelm when Brooklyn ignited the two run ninth win. Westrum hit season home run off loser Johnny Podres in the second inning and the Giants' Jimmy Jones added three runs off Jim Hughes in the ninth. The two walks a pair of

The Mighty Yanks Worried Over Rizzuto

By OSCAR FRALEY
United Press Sports Writer The mighty Yankees biggest worry today was their smallest man.

Setting forth on what could be a precedent-shattering pennant race, the four-straight champions had a watchful eye on "The Scout" For as goes tiny Phil Rizzuto, so will go the Yankees.
They admitted that as they waited tensely for the opening game, A cutting wind whipped through Yankee Stadium, reddening the sun-browned hands of the players standing around the batting cage, and there was a watchful silence as "The Scout" stepped inside to take his licks.

"How many games will he play?" somebody asked a group which included Mickey Mantle, Johnny Mize, Gene Woodling and Hank Bauer?

Nobody said anything for a moment for the Yankees are a ball club which works under the silencing influence of the front office.
Then one of them said:

"That's the $64 question for us."
There were swift nods of assent.
Because despite that touted Yankee pitching and power, they know that the five-foot, six-inch "Scout" is the man who makes the ball club tick. And all is not well with little Phil.

During the off season he suffered a serious ulcer condition. Since then he has been on a strict diet that stripped him of that old bubbling vitality. The effect is obvious, mentally as well as physically.

Down through the years that he has been the jewel of movement of the Yankee infield, Rizzuto always was the soul of irregularity.
He moved with a sure jumble, on and off the field. But now he has withdrawn to a certain extent and there are lines of worried effort around his brown eyes.

"I feel good," he says when questioned about his condition.
"Sure, I feel good a little more weight. But I took my time, getting ready this spring, and I'm okay now."

The fact remains that at 151 pounds he weighs six pounds less than last season—and some under his old top playing weight.

"Don't be quoting me," warned one player dodging from "time sensitive," but what he wonders is whether he'll be able to play those hot weather double headers.

The answer, obviously, is that he won't. Without the weight, Riz-zuto will not have the "swinging strength" and that old split-second timing which made him one of the game's greatest shutouts despite his pocket-sized stature. Then, too, he will be 35 in September, a baseball age at which even the healthiest begin to lose that important half-step.

Children's Drawings Are Said Good
By TOM W. GERBER
PROVIDENCE, R. I. (UP)—Children's crayon drawing impressions of classical music were compared today with some of America's finest modern art.
General Manager Ralph W. Burgard of the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra said some of the drawings fashioned by grade school children in response to a 45-minute concert were "amazing."
"The children were asked to draw their impressions of the music," Burgard said, "and some of the results compared most favorably with the work of at least one modern artist I know whose paintings he cited in the $10,000 bracket."
He called a fourth grade pupil's drawing of scores of tiny soldiers in neat array which was sketched after he heard the orchestra play "Battle Hymn of the Republic." Burgard said it bore an "amazing resemblance" to the work of a famed American artist. He refused to name the artist because he said the comparison might not be considered fair.

Other children, part of the total of 10,000 who have heard five free concerts by the orchestra and submitted crayon sketches, depicted their reactions to Ferde Grofé's "On the Trail," and Smetana's "Dance of the Comedians." Burgard said some of the youngsters' art work consisted merely of wavy lines and intricate designs. Others he said, were concrete pictures of the theme of the music—western scenes after hearing "On the Trail" and a forest scene after hearing Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel."
"But some of the crayon patterns and color combinations were easier to understand than the work of some professional surrealists that I'm familiar with," Burgard said.
While most of the children drew their impressions of the music, others preferred to write their reactions, the orchestra's general manager said.

One sixth grade pupil said the music made him feel "lost in the midst of a crowd in the center of a Christmas rush." Another wrote that the music made him feel like he was "in the center of a native tribe in Africa with drums pounding."
Wrote a third: "Sometimes I felt like I was on Mars without a space suit."

PERSONAL
DEAR JOHN,
Just got back from Kentucky Lake where I've been trying out that new Revelation Fishing Line that I got from Nix at Western Auto. Buddy, that's the best one on the market. Nix said if I broke it to bring it back for a new one, I couldn't believe it, but the guy said he would guarantee the darn thing for 3 whole years! Better get one soon—you'll catch some real whoppers with it.

CHAPTER TWENTY
IT WAS all set up, of course, the cab driver was briefed and ready to finger me.
But he cleared his throat, and stared at me, frowning. Tentatively, he said, "Say Maier, aren't you the guy I—" Hogan slammed his flat down on his desk. "Speak up," he said. "Well, he could tell me it he was the guy," the driver said, with an injured look at the lieutenant.
"I told you to give me a yes or no," Hogan said, rising and striding up to the driver. "You trying to get cute with me."
"No, honest I ain't."
"What's all this about?" I said. Hogan said to the cabbie, "Get out of here," and walked back to his desk. The driver looked around as if he'd missed something, then stared at me, his eyes bright with anger. "You can go, too, wise guy. But let me tell you something; keep out of my way. If you got any ideas about doing police work in this town, forget 'em. You'll think you backed into a buzz-aw if you don't. Got that?"
"Sure, I've got it."
"You stick in town till you hear from me again."
"All right, I'm not going anywhere."
"On your way, wise guy."
Devin took me down to the street. "You missed a story in that paper," he said.
"Yeah? Which one?"
"The one about Jane Nelson's brother. The kid named Bob. He took the gas-pipe. They found him in his home this morning, head in the oven."
"A sex crime, eh?"
"What do you mean?"
"That's what they said about his sister's death." I looked at him, and let him see the unkindness in my face. "I'm a mad guy," I said.
"You heard Hogan. Don't play around with our business."
"What is your business?"
"Beat it, wise guy." He came up close to me, his eyes and face mean. "I said beat it." He was carrying his right hand at his side, knotted into a fist.
I grimaced at him, knowing he'd come. He brought his right fist up in an upper-cut, but I turned sideways, flattening my arm against my body. His fist exploded against the point of my elbow—and the point of an elbow is nothing to hit with your bare fist.
He growled and backed off from me, shaking his head quickly. "An old pug taught me that," I said.
"Beat it. Beat it fast, wise guy." I smiled at him, to add to his troubles, and walked away.
In my room I looked out the window. I spent a good little while at it. I could see a patch of sky, darkening now, and a blacker mass of a cloud that looked no larger than a white hand. After a while the sky was
