

The Laṅkāvatārasūtra: A Bibliographical Survey

Florin Deleanu

1. Preliminary Remarks

This bibliographical survey is far from complete or satisfactory. It began as a basic what-is-what list of primary and secondary sources meant to assist me in the process of rendering into English Śikṣānanda's Chinese translation of the Laṅkāvatārasūtra (to be published in the Bukkyō Dendō Kyōkai English Tripitaka). Over the years, this grew into a larger file which has been used as a reference material for my seminars on the sutra. Encouraged by the positive reactions coming from my students (bet they just wanted higher grades...) as well as the editorial policy set by Professor Akira Saito allowing for research notes to be included in the newly launched Bulletin of the International Institute for Buddhist Studies, I have decided to revise and update my list. After all, without any comprehensive bibliographical surveys, even an incomplete overview like this might serve, dare I hope, as an aid to further studies on the Laṅkāvatārasūtra.

Before embarking on my biblio-journey, I must spell out its scope and methodology.

(1) The survey arranges the primary and the secondary sources chronologically rather than alphabetically. Obviously, this not a bibliographical list attached to a study but a stand-alone contribution conceived primarily as a history of the modern research, translation, and edition of the sutra.

(2) I have not included a section on the Sanskrit manuscripts or, for that matter, on any manuscript testimony in the Tibetan, Chinese, and Japanese traditions.¹ Some basic data is found in footnotes 2, 4, 5, and 27 below, but this hardly does justice to the vast and complicated picture of manuscript witnesses surviving today.² Unfortunately, a proper

² The manuscripts used by Nanjio for his Sanskrit editio princeps are listed in the 'Preliminary Notes' of Nanjio [1923] 1956 (see 2.1.2. and note 4 below). For a far more detailed and updated presentation of the manuscripts, see Takasaki 1981, pp. (1)-(4) [in Japanese], 1-3 [in English] (see 2.1.5. and note 5 below). A list of manuscripts and other primary sources is also given in Hadano 1993, 'Abbreviations' (see 2.4. and note 27 below). A recent survey of the manuscripts as well as other primary sources is found in Okumura 2014, 63-72 (see section 7.2. below). Schmithausen 2006, Horiuchi 2013, and Horiuchi 2015 (see 7.2. below) convincingly show how the use of the Sanskrit manuscripts available nowadays, alongside the Tibetan and Chinese translations, can contribute to improving the existing editions. For recent identifications, see the Khadaliq fragments listed in Wille 2014, 226 (see 7.2. below.). See also Manuscripts Or. 1932-1935 in the Cambridge Digital Library (<http://cudl.lib.cam.ac.uk/collections/sanskrit/1>).

codicological overview of this substantial body could not be undertaken here.

(3) There is an impressive corpus of traditional commentaries dedicated to the Laṅkāvatārasūtra, especially in East Asian Buddhism. For reasons of time and lack of familiarity with this literature, I had to limit Section 3 below to a minimum overview. Fortunately, there are more extensive surveys carried by Japanese scholars which are reasonably easy to access (for more details, see 3.2. below).

(4) The Laṅkāvatārasūtra has had a major impact on the history of Buddhism from India and Tibet to China and Japan. The topic is explored or touched upon in numerous secondary sources and it doubtless deserves a survey in its own right. Unfortunately, here I could only include just a handful of such contributions, mainly related to Chan/Zen Buddhism (see end of section 7.1. below).

(5) The bibliography generally follows the Humanities style recommended by the 16th edition of the Chicago Manual of Style (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2010), with two slight alterations. (A) Given the non-alphabetical order of citation, I have not inverted the name-surname sequence of the (first) author in the Western languages publications. (B) Throughout the paper, I have used British English punctuation, which made some slight stylistic modifications necessary.

I have, however, made an exception in my notes whenever I refer to a study listed in sections 7.1. and 7.2., which are dedicated to the secondary literature. In such cases, I follow the author-date style. The chronological nature of this bibliographical survey will make it easy to locate the studies in the respective sections.

(6) Occasionally, I have inserted brief comments or clarifications between square brackets. Ideally, a bibliographical survey should contain short (better, detailed!) reviews for each entry, but lack of time has made it impossible.

I hope this and many other shortcomings could be addressed in future updates or more comprehensive surveys undertaken by other students in the field.

Last but not least, I should like to express my sincerest gratitude to Prof. em. Dr Lambert Schmithausen (University of Hamburg), Prof. Dr Akira Saitō (International College for Postgraduate Buddhist Studies, Tokyo), and Mr Shin'ichirō Hori (International Institute for Buddhist Studies, Tokyo) for their kind suggestions and continued support.

of Bengal, 1882 (pp. 110-112).

⁴ The edition makes use of 6 Sanskrit witnesses, i.e. 4 MSS: A (Royal Asiatic Society), C (Cambridge Univ.), K (Kawaguchi), and T (Takakusu), and two previous partial editions: Das and Vidyābhūṣaṇa eds. (see 2.1.1.) and Mitra 1882 (see note 2 above) as well as the Tibetan rendering and the three Chinese translations (see below 2.2. and 2.3. respectively).

(NB: K manuscript is recorded in Seiren Matsunami, A Catalogue of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Tokyo University Library (Tokyo: Suzuki Research Foundation, 1965) as Ms No. 331 while T manuscript is Ms No. 333.)

⁵ Takasaki's introduction to the edition (p. 2) also contains important insights concerning the stemmatic relations between the manuscripts. He argues that the extant Sanskrit version reflects a single textual recension, which is identified as 'Nepalese', which can be further divided into four lineages:

- (A) T1 ('T'=#333) - T 6 (#332) - N 11
- (B) C 8 ('C') - R 10 ('A') – N 12
- (C) T2 ('K'=#331)...T4...N13
- (D) T3 - T5 - C9 - N14 - N16 – N17

The existence of two Tibetan translations is attested in the early scriptural catalogues.

The lDan-dkar-ma (or lHan-dkar-ma) catalogue, compiled sometime between 812 and 824, contains the following entries:

- [# 84] lang kar gshegs pa | 3300 ślokas | 11 bam po (Lalou ed., p. 321).¹⁰
[# 252] lang kar gshegs pa rin po che'i le'u | 2400 ślokas | 8 bam po (id. p. 325)

The same situation appears in Bu-ston Chos 'byung catalogue, compiled in or around 1322, records the same situation:

- [# 190] Lang kar gshegs pa; rgya gar las bsgyur ba; 11 bam po (Nishioka ed., p. 71)¹¹
[# 191] Lang-kar gshegs pa'i rin po che'i mdo las sangs rgyas thams cad kyi gsung gi snig po zhes bya ba'i le'u; 'Gos Chos grub kyi rgya las bsgyur ba;

for which see section 7.1. below).

On Chos grub (ca 750-850), see Ueyama Daishun 上山大峻, Tonkō bukkyō no kenkyū 敦煌佛教の研究. Kyoto: Hōzō-kan, 1990, and Hadano et al. 1993, VIII=XI (see 2.4. below).

⁹ The colophon is translated into Japanese in the Otani Catalogue and in Takasaki 2009, 360 (see section 7.1. below).

8 bam po (id.)

As pointed out by Takasaki Jikidō,¹² the sDe dge and sNar thang identification of the 'Phags pa lang-kar gshegs pa'i theg pa chen po'i mdo (D # 107) as a translation from the Chinese is wrong. This version closely corresponds to the extant Sanskrit text, which basically reflects a 'Nepalese recension'.¹³ Furthermore, its language follows the vocabulary and style prescribed by the Mahāvyutpatti. One must add, however, that the 'Phags pa lang-kar gshegs pa'i rin po che'i mdo las sangs rgyas thmas cad kyi gsung gi sning po shes bya ba'i le'u (D #108), which is indeed a rendering from Guṇabhadra's Chinese translation, has a style and vocabulary similar to D #107. This is most likely due to the fact that D #107 preceded D #108 in time and Chos grub consulted D #107 for his version.¹⁴

Another puzzling detail in the history of the Tibetan translation is the discrepancy in the number of textual units known as bam po or 'bundles'. The bam po numbers registered in the traditional catalogues are different from those attested in the extant texts. The lDan-dkar-ma and Bu ston's Catalogue record 11 bam pos while the Dunhuang manuscripts and the sDe dge text have 9 bam pos (see Hadano et al. [2.4, below], pp. VII; X-XI). The difference may be explained as the result of a flexible editorial policy which did not set a fix number of folios to be counted as one bam po. A similar practice is also seen in China where different ways of dividing a text into scrolls, the so-called fen juan 分卷, are attested. The different bam po numbers might thus reflect editorial decisions rather different recensions.

2.3. Chinese Translations

The Laṅkāvatārasūtra was translated three times into Chinese, with all the three versions surviving today (for a false identification, see 2.3.1. below). The translations are not only important for the history of Chinese Buddhism but they also reflect different stages or renditions in the textual development of the Indic original.¹⁵

¹² Takasaki 2009, 359-361 (see 7.1. below).

¹³ On the 'Nepalese recension', see note 5 above.

¹⁴ The wrong attribution of the first version, i.e. D #107, to Chos grub is also pointed out in Hadano et al. 1993, VII, X-XI (see 2.4. below).

¹⁵ All three translations were collated paragraph-by-paragraph by the Ming scholar-monk Yuanke 袁珂 and completed on 12th January 1581 (on the precise date as well as further details of the historical background, see Friedrich Grohmann 高明道, 'Cong "huiyi" tanqi "heben"' 從《會譯》談起《会本》, posted on the Digital Library and Museum of Buddhist Studies site: <http://enlight.lib.ntu.edu.tw/FULLTEXT/JR-BJ013/bj013566668.pdf>). The collated edition, entitled Lengqieabuduola bao jing heyi 楞伽阿跋多羅寶經會譯 (clearly showing that it takes Guṇabhadra's version as the basic text 底本) is found in the Wan zhengzangjing 卐正藏經, Volume I, pp. 445a-6680b. Taipei: Xin wenfeng chuban gongsi, 1980 (also accessible online in

2.3.1. Dharmakṣema 曇無讖 (385-433), Lengqie jing 楞伽經, in four scrolls 四卷.

[Said to have been translated in 414. The translation is not extant and is widely regarded as a false attribution. The attribution and date are found in the Lidai sanbao ji 歷代三寶紀 (T 49.84b7), an ‘infamous’ work of Buddhist historiography compiled by Fei Zhangbo 費長房 in 597. Fei had had to endure the humility of a forced return to secular life during the Buddhist persecution under Emperor Wu 武帝 of the Northern Zhou 北周 Dynasty, persecution which attained its peak between 574 and 578. Animated by overzealous feelings to prove the superiority and vastness of the Buddhist teachings over Taoism, Fei conflated the data making hundreds of false attributions.]

2.3.2. Guṇabhadra 求那跋陀羅 (394-468),¹⁶ Lengqieabuduola bao jing 楞伽阿跋多羅寶經, in four scrolls 四卷.

[Translated in 443, also known as the ‘translation of the [Liu] Song Dynasty’ 宋譯. Main canonical editions: Taishō No. 670; T 16. 480a-514b; Zhonghua¹⁷ No. 168, vol. 17, pp. 560-621.

Guṇabhadra’s version does not contain Chapters I, IX, and X of the extant Sanskrit original (chapters also found in the Tibetan rendering as well as the other two Chinese translations). Most likely, Guṇabhadra’s version reflects an early version of the Laṅkāvatārasūtra, and the text continued to expand over the next century or so.

According to the Biographies of Eminent Monks 高僧傳, the translation was undertaken at a time when Guṇabhadra had little, or no, knowledge of Chinese. This is hardly unusual in Chinese Buddhist history where many of the so-called ‘translators’ from India or Central Asia had very limited knowledge of the language they were supposed to render into. Their main task was to recite or read out a manuscript of the text and explain its difficult parts to one or more Chinese interpreters who were assisting (‘receiving with their brushes’ 筆受) and editing the translation. Seen from our age, these ‘assistants’ would rather deserve the name of translators, or at least editors, but the mediaeval Chinese system of judgement and sensibilities were governed by other paradigms. What makes Guṇabhadra special, however, is that he actually came to regret his lack of linguistic skills.

the CBETA database).

¹⁶ His name is translated into Chinese as 功德賢. For Guṇabhadra’s biography, see the Biographies of Eminent Monks 高僧傳 (T 50.344a-445a). (For details concerning the way he translated the Laṅkāvatārasūtra, see below.)

The Biographies of Eminent Monks tell us that ‘Later, [Guṇabhadra] translated the Śrīmālā[sūtra] and the Laṅkāvatārasūtra in the Danyang Prefecture 丹陽郡,¹⁸ with a group of more than seven hundred disciples, Baoyun 寶雲¹⁹ conveying the translation and Huiguan 慧觀²⁰ being in charge of writing [the polished Chinese text] and frequently asking [the Indian Master] until they could obtain a superb grasping the basic meaning. [But] later Guṇabhadra reflected on the fact he had not yet gained command of the language of the Song 宋 [Dynasty] [i.e. Chinese] and harboured feelings of shame and sadness.’(後於丹陽郡，譯出《勝鬘》、《楞伽經》，徒衆七百餘人，寶雲傳譯，慧觀執筆，往復諮詢，妙得本旨。後 [...] 跋陀自忖 未善宋言 有懷愧歎。T 50.344b3-9).

2.3.3. Bodhiruci 善提流支 (d. 527),²¹ Ru Lengqie jing 入楞伽經, in ten scrolls 十卷.

[Translated in 514; also known as the ‘translation of the Wei Dynasty’ 魏譯.

Main canonical editions: Taishō No. 671; T 16.514c-586b; Zhonghua No. 169, vol. 17, pp. 622-732.

Bodhiruci’s translation not only contains all the chapters of the extant Sanskrit version but also shows signs of augmentation (and actually renames some of the chapters). It is hard to determine whether (a) the passages unattested in the other versions reflect a temporary ‘inflation’ in the history of the text, later deleted and edited into the text we know from the extant Sanskrit, the Tibetan translation, and Śikṣānanda’s Chinese translation, or (b) the Bodhiruci version is a separate redaction which circulated within a certain area for a limited period of time and was later discarded, or (c) the passages in question represent Bodhiruci’s own explanatory additions in the process of translation, also showing signs of ‘creative zeal’.]

2.3.4. Śikṣānanda 實叉難陀 (652-710),²² Dasheng ru Lengqie jing 大乘入楞伽經, in seven scrolls 七卷.

¹⁹ Chinese scholar-monk known for his translation activities (375[?]-449).

²⁰ Celebrated scholar-monk who flourished in the first half of the 5th century.

²² His name is also transcribed as 乞叉難陀, and translated into Chinese as 學喜. For his biography, see the Biographies of Eminent Monks [compiled under the] Song Dynasty 宋高僧傳 (T 50.718c-719a). It mentions (T 50.718c29-719a1) that he rendered the Laṅkāvatārasūtra, and Empress Wu Zetian 則天武后 wrote a Preface to the translation (for a study on the Preface, see Ishii 2002 in section 7.2. below).

The Laṅkāvatārasūtra: A Bibliographical Survey

[Translated between 700-704; also known as the ‘translation of the Tang Dynasty’ 唐譯. Main canonical editions: Taishō No. 672; T 16. 587a-640c; Zhonghua No. 170, vol. 17, pp. 733-809.

This is the closest Chinese version to the extant Sanskrit text (as well as the Tibetan translation).]

2.3.4. The stylistic differences between the three Chinese translations are sketched out, albeit with a dose of biased judgement, in the Arcane Meaning of the Essence of the Laṅkāvatāra 入楞伽心玄義, one of the best known commentaries authored by Fazang 法藏, the third patriarch of the Huayan/Kegon 華嚴 school.²³ I say ‘biased’ because Fazang was a member of the Chinese team which assisted Śikṣānanda’s efforts to render the sutra. Nonetheless, his views have attained something close to an iconic status when discussing the matter. Here is his verdict:

‘The wording of the translation in four scrolls [by Guṇabhadra] is incomplete, the language follows the Western [i.e. Indic] pronunciation [to such a degree] that it leaves no way [even] for distinguished, intelligent [readers] to understand it and makes fools and common folk overstretch their conjectures and construe it in an erroneous manner.

Although the translation in ten scrolls [by Bodhiruci] is slightly more complete in its wording and chapters, the holy purport [of the scripture] makes itself clear with difficulty and its adding words and muddling the wording beclouds the meaning or [simply] leads to mistakes. Eventually, the clear and correct truth [of the sutra] becomes stuck in a [confusing] language.

The Sacred Empress [Wu Zetian 則天武后] deplored this incomprehensibility and ordered a new translation. Now, [for the translation undertaken by Master Śikṣānanda,] we have carefully checked²⁴ five Sanskrit manuscripts and compared the two [previous] Chinese translations. We have adopted the good points and corrected the shortcomings. Building [upon all these] outstanding achievements, [this translation] surely [succeeds in] fully conveying the meaning. We [therefore] hope that those studying [the sutra] will fortunately be free from any errors.²⁵

其四卷迴文不盡，語順西音，致令髦彥英哲措解無由，愚類庸夫強推邪解。其十卷雖文品少具，聖意難顯，加字混文者泥於意，或致有錯，遂使明明正理 滯以方言。聖上慨此難通，復令更譯。今則詳五梵本，勘二漢

²³ For a well-weighed judgement of the merits of the three translations, see Horiuchi 2015. See also the chapter on ‘Problems in [Guṇabhadra’s] Translation of the Laṅkāvatārasūtra in Four Scrolls’ 『四卷楞伽』の訳文の問題 in Taksaki 2009, 357-372 (see Section 7.1. below).

²⁴ A more literal translation of 詳 would be ‘clarify in detail’.

²⁵ Literally, ‘beseech/hope the students [of the text] will fortunately have no error’.

A Sogdian fragment containing a long citation from Ch. VIII Māṃsabhakṣaṇaparivarta, alongside its French rendering, was published in:

E. Benveniste, Textes sogdiens. Paris: Librairie Orientaliste Paul Guethner, pp. 29-43, 1940.

According to Benveniste, this is a rendering from the Chinese. The French scholar does not specify which Chinese translation, but the book contains an appendix (pp. 186-192) with P. Demiéville's rendering of Guṇabhadra's version (see 2.3.2. above).²⁸

2.6. Khotanese Parallel

The Khotanese text Mañjuśrīnairātmayāvatārasūtra (lines 181-189) contains (or cites) verses identical to the Laṅkāvatārasūtra (vv. 871-879; Nanjo ed. pp. 374-375). The Khotanese version is edited, translated, and discussed by Ronald Eric Emmerick, 'Some Verses from the Laṅkāvatārasūtra in Khotanese', in A Green Leaf: Papers in Honour of Professor Jes A. Asmussen [Acta Iranica 28], pp. 125-133. Leiden: Brill, 1988.

3. Traditional Commentaries

3.1. There only two extant Indian commentaries on the sutra, both preserved in Tibetan translations:²⁹

3.1.1. Jñānaśrībhadra, 'Phags pa lang kar gshegs pa'i 'grel pa (*Āryalaṅkāvatāravṛtti)

P #5519; D #4018 (for modern edition, see 2.4. above)

3.1.2. Jñānavajra, 'Phags pa lang kar gshegs pa zhes bya ba theg pa chen po'i mdo'i

'grel pa de bzhin gshegs pa'i snying po'i rgyan zhes bya ba

(*Āryalaṅkāvatāranāmamahāyānasūtravṛtti Tathāgatahṛdayālamkāra nāma)

3.2. The number of Eastern Asian commentaries is impressive. Detailed lists are found in Yamakami's 'Introduction' to his translation in the Kokuyaku daizōkyō (see 4.1. below; pp. 4-5), Tokiwa's 'Introduction' to his rendering in the Kokuyaku issaikyō, pp. 65-66 (see 4.2. below), Takasaki's Ryōga kyō, pp. 419-416 (4.3. below), and Okumura 2014, 73-75 (see 7.2. below).

Here I shall only mention Kokan Shiren's 虎關師鍊 (1278-1346) Treatise on the Essence of the Buddha's Words 佛語心論, in 18 scrolls 卷, completed in 1324.³⁰

²⁹ For a presentation of these two commentaries, see Kimura 2007 (section 7.2. below). For translations from Chinese commentaries, see Hadano et al. 1993, pp. VII ff. (see 2.4. above). See also Okumura 2014, 72-73.

The work, which comments upon Guṇabhadra's translation of the Laṅkāvatāra-sūtra (see 2.3.2. above), has been the most influential work of its kind in Japan, continuing to be studied by scholars and students to our day.
