Carousel:

This carousel is located along the Southbank of the Thames River. I walked past this carousel on many occasions with both friends and classmates, and it was one of the featured photographs in my final project for the Art Photography course with the British Studies Program.

Coliseum:

The Roman Coliseum. Rome, Italy. This was probably one of my favorite spots I got to visit during my entire trip. It's truly indescribable being able to stand in a historical landmark, especially one as magnificent as the Coliseum.

Florence:

My friend Amanda and I took a trip to Italy during our break from classes, and Florence was one of our destinations. This photo was taken during a wine tour throughout the Italian countryside. The world has many beautiful landscapes, but being able to see this countryside was definitely a site to behold.

London:

My favorite city in the world is London, England, and I can honestly say that I will never get sick of traveling to this city. My trip with the British Studies Program was my second trip to London, and this photo was taken from The London Eye, one of my favorite landmarks.

Tower Bridge:

I got to experience London at one of the most amazing times because I was there during the 2012 Summer Olympics. One of the first sites we saw upon our arrival was the Tower Bridge on the horizon adorned with the Olympic rings, and every night when the bridge lit up the rings were also illuminated. It was remarkable seeing the city come to life throughout the month before the Olympics.

Women's Basketball:

The event that I will never forget as long as I live is the Olympic women's basketball game that I got to attend on the opening day of the Olympic games. Only a select lucky few BSP students got to go to an Olympic event, and I was able to attend the China vs. Czech Republic game as a reward for being chosen to present my final project at the BSP Symposium the night before. This was, hands down, the most memorable experience of my life to date.
