When Trinity College partnered with edX in 2014, both Dan and I went along for the ride to explore, but remain skeptical of the hype.

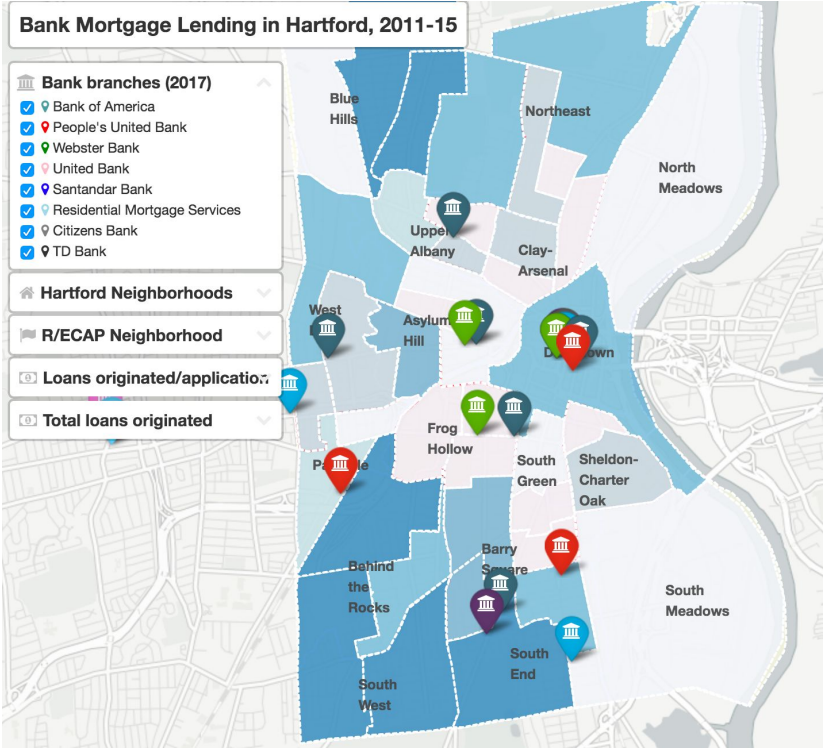

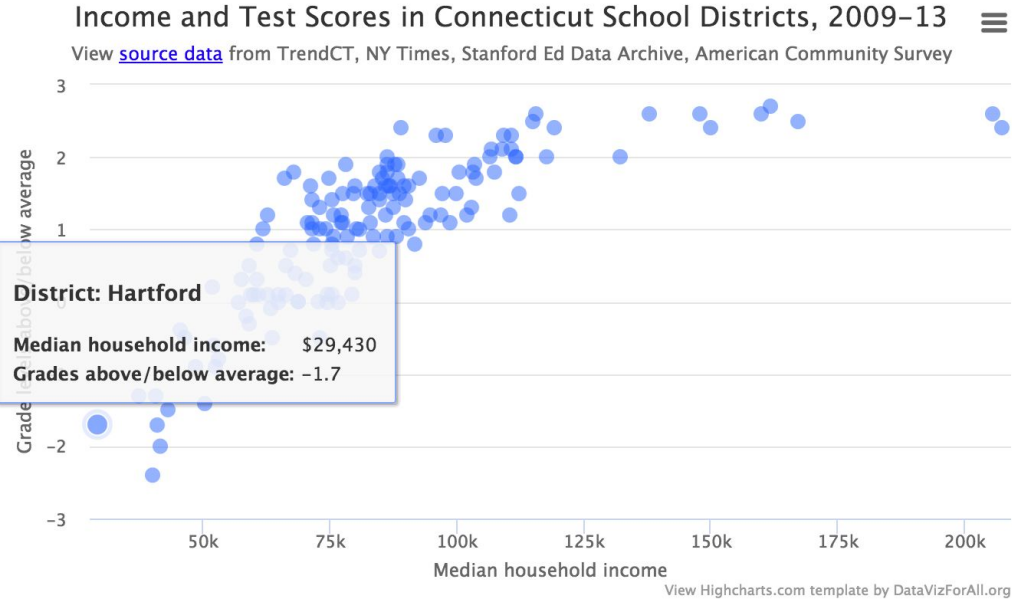

Consider this my travel journal. . .

The screenshot shows the EdX course page for "Data Visualization for All". The navigation bar includes "Courses", "Programs", "Schools & Partners", and "About". A search bar is present. The breadcrumb trail reads "Home > All Subjects > Data Analysis & Statistics > Data Visualization for All". The main content area features a video player with a play button, a map of Hartford, CT, and a photo of three people. The title "Data Visualization for All" is followed by a description: "Tell your story with charts and maps on the web, using easy-to-learn free tools: Google Sheets, Tableau, Highcharts, Carto, Leaflet, GitHub". The Trinity College logo is at the bottom right.

9) Your work will be evaluated based on the following criteria:

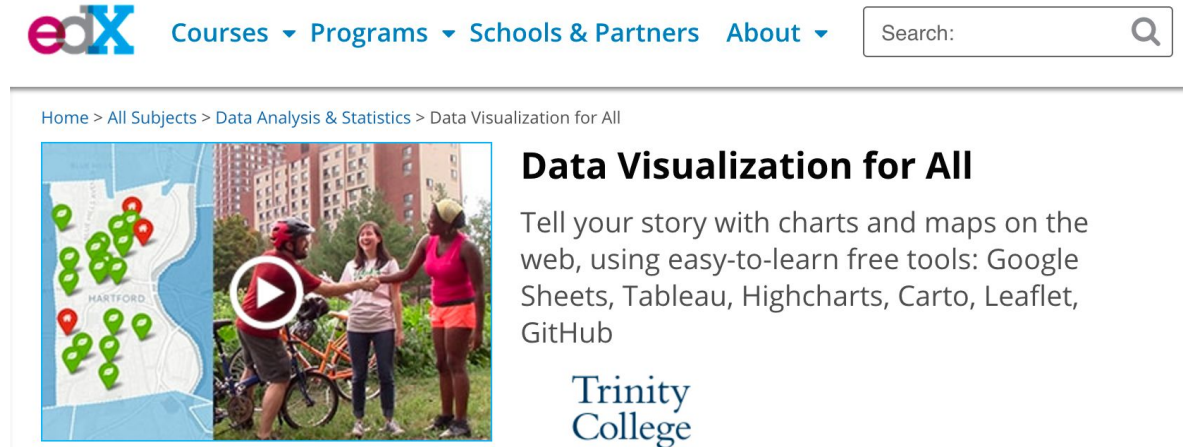

1. Story: Did the author clearly tell a meaningful story about the data, with text and visuals?
2. Chart Type: Did the author choose a chart type that best matches their data story?
3. Embed: Did the author embed an interactive chart into the web page?
4. Good Design: Did the author follow principles of good chart design?

Q: Is dropout rate similar to other MOOCs at Trinity and elsewhere?

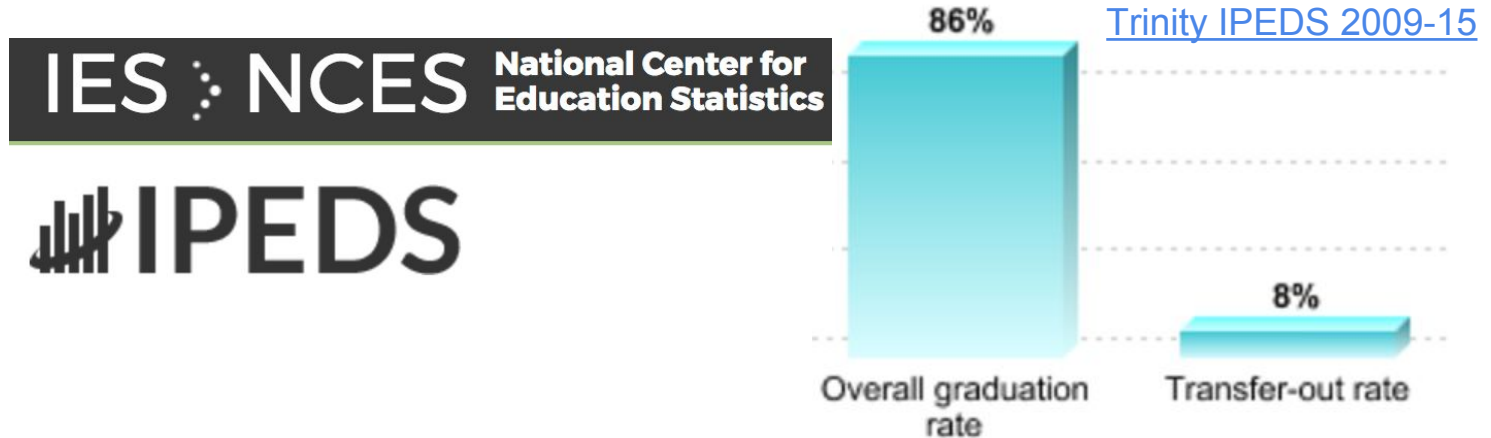

A: We don't yet know, because almost no one releases detailed info

Recommendation 3: Openly publish MOOC retention data, just as accreditors and government require traditional college data.

MOOCs pressure small liberal arts colleges to compete with large research universities, but we cannot win at their game.
