Dear Little Children

JEANNETTE K. SETIAWAN

Dear little girls, I hope you stop trying to find yourself in your reflection, because no mirror reflects your soul.

Your beauty is not going to be found in your reflection, but in loving yourself.

Dear little boys, I hope you stop trying to find yourself in the fog of cigarettes, because you are stronger than the way they define you.

Your strength is not going to be found in your confusion, but in accepting yourself.

Dear little children, I hope you love yourselves the way your parents love you, because you are more than the way society defines you.

You are way more than what they think you are.
