Staffing & Work Flow

Staffing and work flow remained the same as the previous academic year: One full time reference librarian. There is no set percentage of time or formal schedule for work related to the IR. For digitization, work increases during the spring and summer months, while outreach and marketing efforts are the mostly achieved during the academic year.

From May – July, 2013 we had an intern from the University of Rhode Island Graduate Studies of Library and Information Science program work on digitizing restaurant menus from the Marilyn B. Feingold collection. As a result 435 additional menus from this collection were added to the IR.

Equipment

A new HP desktop workstation was installed. The new workstation is running Windows 7 and Adobe Pro XI. We are still using the EPSON GT-20000 scanner with PaperPort scanning management software.

Professional Development & Training

N/A

Successes

The reputation of the ScholarsArchive and JWU Library as a destination for private menu collections continues to grow and make an impact in open access digitized special collections.

Challenges

The challenge remains to continue outreach, collection, and publishing efforts and forming new partnerships, while recognizing the limits of a single staff member with full time responsibilities elsewhere.

Opportunities & Goals

A future opportunity to include a wider variety of digitized special collections in support of the JWU Centennial celebration is a very real possibility. Subject librarian liaison connections could lead to a wider variety of scholarship and creative works.

Conclusions

The IR continues to grow and expand its reach in many unique and interesting ways, despite the lack of time available to spend on outreach and face-to-face marketing.
