CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

Much emphasis is being placed on the teaching of reading today, and yet students are still needing remedial help. The author's interest in the vocabulary comparability of basal reading textbooks began when trying to place a remedial student into a corresponding level in another basal series--there was no way to know if the vocabulary levels corresponded.

Through professional discussions with others it was found that many had faced this same problem with two types of students: 1) Those transferring to a new school from a school system using another basal series; and, 2) Those needing additional remedial help.

This study explores the possibility of obtaining a vocabulary correlation between basal reading series.

The Problem

Approximately three hundred thousand school children change schools each year between the grades of first and third. Each time these children are moved the chances are that they will have to become accustomed to a new math series, science series, spelling series, reading series, and other subject textbooks. Placement in some of these series will be done according to the results of a test. However, no test exists that could test the background vocabulary a child has received in a previous reading series.

Information in regards to how the vocabulary at a given level in each basal series corresponds to another series at the same level is not now available. While both readers may be at what is labeled a Level 2, who is to know if they are at the same reading level? The first series may have eleven series for up through grade 3, while the second series may have only eight.

A second problem presented is that of the remedial reader. It is true that this child may need to repeat a step in a level, but it is harmful to the psychological state of the child to repeat this level in the same basal series. The stories, seatwork, and presentations tend to be boring the second time over and the feeling of failure is increased. To be able to place the child in another series for his remedial work would be a boon to both the child and the teacher.

Purpose of the Study

The purpose of this study is to establish a method which can be used to place a student into a new basal series by using the information from a past basal series. The needed information for the past series would be the basal series name, the level, and the page in the book the child has last successfully finished. By knowing these factors, and using them in connection with the chart given, the teacher will be able to determine at what point the student is in the new series.

Definitions of Terms

Basal Reading Series: A set of books for the teaching of reading which are a series and have a core vocabulary.

Master Series: The series which the student is moving from.

Receiving Series: The series which the student is moving to.

Base Word: A word not previously presented to the student which is necessary to know before entering the corresponding Receiving Series. Proper names are not included.

Limitations of the Study

The study will be based only on vocabulary and where it is presented first in each series' teacher's guide. This will exclude comprehension, phonics, and other materials introduced in the series. It will also in some series exclude the words which the authors call "decodable". To be totally accurate each series would need to be completely typed into, and then analysed by, the computer.

While the study and method of placement will cover grades K to 3 inclusive, it will not cover material beyond this level. Also, there are only five basal series represented, and in these only one edition of the series.

CHAPTER II

REVIEW OF LITERATURE:

AN OVERVIEW OF THE FACTORS INCLUDED IN BASAL READERS

Textbook Development

The first series of what is called a basal reading series appeared in America in 1790. Noah Webster, the author of these books, first published The Grammatical Institute, Part Three (Carpenter, 1963, p. 60). "Webster explained in the first part of his book that 'clear and distinct' articulation was necessary in reading, and that the pupil should notice 'the stops and make no pause where the sense required none' (Carpenter, 1963, p. 60)."

Other authors such as Caleb Bingham and Lindley Murray soon followed Webster's books. However, William McGuffery's readers, known as the "McGuffery's Eclectic Readers", were the most popular series of textbooks published in America.

The series of six books which were continually revised over the years not only taught youngsters how to read, but the more difficult volumes provided most of the literature to which three generations of Americans were exposed (Black, 1967, p. 128).

These books controlled their reader levels by controlling the length of the words in each level. But not until 1910 was comprehension taught as a part of reading.

Early in the 1960's another step was taken. Outdated were the readers which progressed by grades. The basal series today are mainly on the principle of progression as quickly as the student is ready. Therefore the basal series are prepared by levels and numbered as such in most series.

"The textbook houses of the mid-1960's benefited from two almost concurrent boons: a population explosion and an outpouring from the Federal Treasury (Black, 1967, p. 129)."

The preparation of a basal reading series is no longer the work of one man. A linguistic consultant, a children's literature consultant, an educational consultant, advisors, editorial staff members, and artists all work together to produce a series.

Today the multi-colored, coordinated textbooks and workbooks are found as the core of the American reading program. "A survey of 1300 teachers sampled throughout the country indicates that 95 to 98 per cent of the primary teachers use basal readers every school day (Spache & Spache, 1973, p. 147)." The basal reader program is also supported by a majority of reading experts, and as such is a prominent force in America today.

Vocabulary

Two important skills are included under this heading: 1) the use of meaning clues, including context; 2) instant recognition of words. To facilitate the learning of these skills the basal reader has, during the past years, had a "controlled vocabulary". This vocabulary has been arrived at independently by each publisher of the basals.

An example of this controlled vocabulary is the Free-Association Study made by Ginn and Company in 1936. This was a study aimed at graded vocabularies "involving over 20,000 children and 2,7000,000 words of data and resulting in tentative vocabulary lists for Grades II to VIII. This list was then combined with a list of the other most important vocabulary studies that have been made (Buckingham & Dolch, 1936, p. 3)." These were: "Florn's Vocabulary of Six-year olds", "Kindergarten Onior List", "Jones", "Tidyman", "Studley-Ware", "Payne-Garrison", "Bauer", "Gates", and "Thorndike" (Buckingham & Dolch, 1936, p. 19).

This method used by Ginn to arrive at a graded, controlled vocabulary is typical of most during the first half of the twentieth century.

Criticism of the controlled vocabulary grew out of four unfortunate practices:

"1) The emphasis in promoting readers (and in the development of them also) has been on the number of words in a series, not on the development of skills needed to identify new words.

2) Publishers competed to show how few words they used in a series. This unsound practice grew out of a sound theory: Children can best be taught to read with materials that are easy to read, other factors considered.

3) Publishers went to extremes in describing the extent of their controls.

4) The rigid application of such controls caused some authors to fall into the practice of writing inane and contrived namby-pamby selections (Harris, 1966, p. 17)."

During the past ten years the editors of the basal reader series have moved toward a larger core vocabulary which "includes the words that most children use in their oral vocabularies and will have met in their reading after two or three years in school regardless of what kind of reading program they have been using (Johnson, Ramirez, Smith & others, 1973, p. 33)."

At least this is the theory. However, numerous studies of the vocabularies of various basal series have, in the past, shown very little overlap. "For example, a recent survey by Selma E. Herr found only six hundred words used in all twelve series studied out of a total of approximately twelve thousand words (Spache & Spache, 1973, p. 173)."

In the past few years among the students who have needed remedial reading work, the percentage has been climbing of those who have vocabulary difficulties.

This group's exceptions to the broad developmental program must be dealt with.

"Some pupils exhibit very slow growth in sight vocabulary or in independence in word attack. Some pupils are limited in the number of new words they can deal with in a unit of time. Others are so limited in language experiences (word meanings) that progress must be slow. For many of these pupils the controlled vocabulary of the basal series is essential and really basic to their needs as they gradually develop the abilities to explore other materials (Spache & Spache, 1973, p. 175)."

Readability

Knowing where to place a child in a series is difficult and one method of placement is that of the informal reading inventory. The procedure for constructing a reading inventory is not difficult and is a real help to the teacher on the spot and pressed for time.

The first step is to select a basal reading series which your students are not familiar with. It is very important that the students are not familiar with the stories.

Step two consists of choosing twenty words from the basal vocabulary index of each level. Next, select a story from somewhere near the end of each level. For each story chosen, write ten comprehension questions. The questions should be divided into: two main ideas, two details, one inference, one sequence, and four vocabulary questions.

Each child must be tested alone. Beginning with the pre-primer level the child should read the vocabulary list upward until at least four words are missed in a given level.

"Four or more mistakes is considered a child's frustration level--the reading level that most often produces failure.

Zero or one mistake is the independent level. Two or three mistakes, therefore, is the instructional level--the level at which the child should be reading in school (Sebesta & Wallen, 1972, p. 227)."

At this point the child should read the comprehension test for the instructional level found in vocabulary. This should be graded the same way. Once these two evaluations are made it is best to remember one rule in grouping. Don't overload the child.

This is only one example of how to use an informal reading inventory. And there are about as many variations as there are authors.

Irving Lorge at Columbia University developed a formula by which the difficulty of reading material could be roughly determined. Lorge was aware, however, of drawbacks of readability tests. Such elements as conceptual difficulty, organization of material, interest of material and student background. He tested students on the meaning of some passages of equal length difficulty, where vocabularies, sentence length, complexity, and the topic treated were the same. "The only apparent difference, as far as Lorge could tell, lay in organization and in clues to organization. He tested students on the meaning of these passages and found that they were better able to answer questions on passages well-organized and bearing clues to organization (Mc Cullough, 1969, pp. 432-443)."

To know what to expect of a child in reading is difficult for the average teacher. A simple, yet usable, formula for estimating reading expectancy was suggested by Bond and Tinker (1967, p. 92):

"Reading expectancy = years in school times IQ divided by 100, plus 1.0"

The use of an expectancy formula such as this one may have value in helping the teacher and the pupil to set reasonable expectations of reading achievement, especially for the less able pupil. Establishing reasonable expectations may go a long way toward relieving the excessive pressures often put on below-average achievers because of an unreasonable concern that they be brought up to the "norm". It may also help to challenge the more apt pupil who, with proper instruction, should perform considerably better in reading.

One final caution must be heeded. Any kind of predictive formula or expectancy formula can be terribly misunderstood or misused. Approach these with care.

Summary

Reading, like many other educational fields, can be accused of both under and over reacting. Textbook development has moved forward in one direction, many times ignoring other areas of the same field. However, the pendulum seems to swing back and forth, much as in other areas.

Trends, redevelopment of old ideas, new philosophies--all are needed to help stimulate the professional teacher. But often this maze is confusing to the teacher and many seem to be grasping for a solid base on which to build their foundation.

The lack of consistency found in the vocabularies of the basal reading series tends to be confusing to a reader who is being moved or is being placed in a remedial series. This confusion from a lack of background may also be seen in the readability scores. It is difficult for a child to place at a level consistent with his former work if he is faced with a seventy-five per cent new vocabulary. For this reason it would also cause one to wonder at the accuracy within a classroom when a second basal series is used as an informal test of readability. Do the two basals have similar vocabularies and styles?

While the criticism of a controlled vocabulary is valid, the other extreme of no basic vocabulary may be proving to be just as harmful to the children who are learning to read. No tool is going to work unless teachers use this tool with understanding and care. One does not get in to an automobile and let it take one where it wills. No, the speed and direction are controlled by the driver. Thus with any tool used, Teachers must learn to control it and make it help them.

CHAPTER III

RESEARCH DESIGN

Choice of Basal Reading Series

The choice of the five basal series which were used in this study was taken partially from the information obtained by Rosemae Hafstrom in her research study entitled, A Survey of the Methods and Criteria Used in the Selection of Reading Textbooks, and partially from the availability of books. The five series chosen are the following:

- Series A: The Bookmark Reading Program, by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, Inc., New York, 1974.
- Series B: The Houghton Mifflin Readers, by Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, 1966.
- Series C: McMillan Basal Readers, by MacMillan Company, New York, 1966.
- Series D: Harper and Row Design for Reading, by Harper and Row, Publishers, Inc., New York, 1972.
- Series E: Seventh-day Adventist Basal Series, Pacific Press, Mountain View, California, 1967.

Procedures

After obtaining clearance for this research project from the department of Education, the computer center was consulted and a method of analysis was established. This method called for the use of the vocabulary lists from each basal series.

It was at this time that each publishing company was contacted. The reactions of the companies were varied. Some provided these lists immediately while there were two companies which refused to provide the vocabulary list.

Each participating basal series was assigned a letter which was used for identification throughout the study. Each series also had a number assigned for each level.

The vocabulary lists were then keypunched on to computer cards with the following information: the series identification letter, the series level number, the vocabulary word, and the page the word was first introduced into the series.

This information was then used for computer analysis as described in the section entitled "Method of Analysis".

Method of Analysis

The completed vocabulary lists were fed into the computer and a readout was given of all the words which appeared in each of the series. This readout also included an alphabetical list of the words in each series.

The second data readout was of a matrix nature showing all of the words in all of the series combined alphabetically, and on what page and level each word appeared in the series. An example of this matrix follows:

Word List	Series:	A	B	C	D	E
Agreed		/	/	8/90	/	/
Ah		/	5/264	/	/	8/218
ahead		7/170	/	/	/	6/143

This matrix gave the information regarding just how widely the word presentation varies among the series and how often the words are presented in each series and at the same approximate levels.

The final step in the comparing of the basal series was to obtain a printout matrix of each Master Series at each level, comparing the words used in this Master Series level to each Receiving Series. From this printout a formula will be used to obtain the comparison percentages. The following formula was used:

MV: the vocabulary words in the Master Series at a given level

RV: the vocabulary words in the Receiving Series at one given level which are also in the MV

$$\frac{MV}{RV} \times 100 = x\%$$

If the  $x\%$  was above 75%, the Master Series at that level and the Receiving Series at the given level will be considered comparable. However, when there is no directly corresponding level in a Receiving Series, the RV needed to establish 75% will be found by using page numbers in the levels. Thus Series C, Level 3, may correspond at the 75% level with Series E, Level 5, page 123 to Level 6, page 34.

While the 75% level is a high percentage the words in both series which lie outside of this range must be dealt with. This will be done as follows: Each word in the Master Series Level which has not yet been presented in the Receiving Series is no problem, as this will be repeated. However, each word already presented in the Master Series and not in the Receiving Series will be called a Base word and in the final listing will be presented as such, and should be taught to the student before the Receiving Level is accurate.

Analysis Revisions

Owing to the impossibility of obtaining a 75% correspondence, an alternate method for comparison had to be designed when the data had begun running. The method which was used follows:

The author began to look for minimum and maximum levels between which all of the words for a given Receiving Series level had been introduced in the Master Series. This also was at a very low percentage and a backup word list was created to show all of the words which were in the given Receiving Series level but never appeared in the entire Master Series.

CHAPTER IV

FINDINGS, CONCLUSIONS, AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Findings

The data obtained was printed in tables. Because of the large amount of data dealt with these tables are listed in Appendix A. The following explanation will explain what is contained in each table, its meaning and how it would affect a child. (This example table is the first to appear in Appendix A.)

The back-up words for Level 1 are:

bug duck good in pig pond sandy turtle

There are 32 words in Level 1 of Series A. In comparing Series A with Series B, each at Level 1, there is a 34.37% match. There also is a 31.25% match (outside of Level 1) ranging from 6-159 to 2-13.

Explanation of Use of Tables

The back-up words are words listed which appear in Series A, Level 1, but do not appear in Series B at all.

The percentage of words which match (appear in Level 1 of both Series A and Series B) is 34.37%. There is an additional 31.25% match, or percentage of words which appear in Level 1 of Series A and in Series B (exclusive of Level 1) between Level 6, page 159 and Level 2, page 13.

Each table gives the above information. There is one table for each series at each level as compared to each of the other four series.

Conclusions

Each publisher compiles his own core vocabulary list. This list is compiled by the individual publisher's standards. Due to this factor there is a very low comparison ratio between the different basal series vocabularies.

As a result of this study, there are positive implications for the instruction of the child in decoding skills as soon as he begins his education. Structural clues, context clues, phonics, and other methods are all recommended to the instructor.

In consideration of the results of this study the student who is moved from one basal series to another and does not have sufficient decoding skills may appear at a lower level in reading than he has achieved previously, due to vocabulary change.

An effort has been made to show the difficulties which a teacher may perceive for the student who is changing his basal series.

Recommendations for Further Study

The following list includes possibilities for further study in the area of vocabularies in basal readers.

1. Additional information could be obtained by a study comparing a larger number of basal series.
2. A study comparing the vocabulary lists with the Dolch word lists could be made.

3. Further information might be found by working with the obtained data and the Dale Chall Readability Formula.

4. A compilation of all the words which appear in every basal series could be made. (See Appendix B.)

5. An alternate method of comparing the vocabularies could be to make a vocabulary list directly from the text of the book and not use the publishers' vocabulary lists.

APPENDIX A

These tables are the comparison of each series at each level to each other series. The series levels correspond to the following basal reading series:

- Series A: The Bookmark Reading Program, by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, Inc., New York, 1974.
- Series B: The Houghton Mifflin Readers, by Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, 1966.
- Series C: McMillan Basal Readers, by MacMillan Company, New York, 1966.
- Series D: Harper and Row Design for Reading, by Harper and Row, Publishers, Inc., New York, 1972.
- Series E: Seventh-day Adventist Basal Series, Pacific Press, Mountain View, California, 1967.
