

University of HUDDERSFIELD

University of Huddersfield Repository

Cockayne, David and Wright, Len Tiu

Liberating the modern Chinese football fan: a theoretical perspective

Original Citation

Cockayne, David and Wright, Len Tiu (2014) Liberating the modern Chinese football fan: a theoretical perspective. In: Marking Asia Group Scholar Global Business, Marketing and Tourism Conference, November 2014, Indonesia.

This version is available at <http://eprints.hud.ac.uk/27203/>

The University Repository is a digital collection of the research output of the University, available on Open Access. Copyright and Moral Rights for the items on this site are retained by the individual author and/or other copyright owners. Users may access full items free of charge; copies of full text items generally can be reproduced, displayed or performed and given to third parties in any format or medium for personal research or study, educational or not-for-profit purposes without prior permission or charge, provided:

- The authors, title and full bibliographic details is credited in any copy;
- A hyperlink and/or URL is included for the original metadata page; and
- The content is not changed in any way.

For more information, including our policy and submission procedure, please contact the Repository Team at: E.mailbox@hud.ac.uk.

<http://eprints.hud.ac.uk/>

LIBERATING THE MODERN CHINESE FOOTBALL FAN: A THEORETICAL PERSPECTIVE

David C. Cockayne and Len Tiu Wright

Authors emails: d.c.cockayne@hud.ac.uk and l.t.wright@hud.ac.uk

Business School, University of Huddersfield, Queensgate, Huddersfield, HD1 3DH, UK

ABSTRACT

The cultural and philosophical heritage of modernism underpinning general marketing management theory imparts profound implications for organisations operating in professional sport. This theoretical paper uses the context of China's professional football industry to argue that marketing may benefit from a more postmodern approach to marketing management.

INTRODUCTION

The aim of this theoretical paper is to introduce the conceptual and philosophical differences between modern and postmodern approaches to marketing in an attempt to offer creative marketing solutions to practitioners operating in the professional football industry of China.

The paper starts by introducing modernism in marketing, before addressing the postmodern condition. A piece of primary research which has acted as the inspiration for the paper is then introduced, before linking these findings and interpretations to potential postmodern approaches to marketing.

It is hoped this research will influence decision makers in Chinese sport marketing, and also contribute to the relatively under researched area of postmodern approaches to marketing (Kozinets, 2002).

BACKGROUND

The ideas, opinions, and beliefs humans hold in relation to consumption, markets, and culture are hinged firmly against modernist cultural and philosophical foundations (Firat & Venkatesh, 1995). Modernism is largely associated with 19th century economic industrialization, but in particular with the societal transition from feudalism to capitalism (Foster, 1990). This era of humanity signifies the positivist search for absolute truth (Goulding, 2000) through the search for a rationally constructed and technologically orientated world, based around a concept of what Lyotard (1984, 1992) terms metanarratives – overarching goals, or aims which direct future human action. For Firat and Venkatesh (1995:240) “[t]he postmodern quest is therefore to ‘reenchant human life’ and to liberate the consumer from a repressive rational/technological scheme”.

MODERNISM AND MARKETING

Modernist marketing developed in the second half of the 20th century, defining the basic principles of modern marketing and its role in society (Dholakia & Firat, 2006). The pioneering marketing theories of Alderson (1957, 1965) consolidated, and enshrined the marketing concept at the heart of modern marketing (Bagozzi, 1975; Kotler, 1972). The marketing concept signifies marketing’s place in the modern order of human history by prescribing the relationship between institutions and their consumers and/or other stakeholders. This relationship has since been extended to an ever-growing range of institutions from firms, non-profit entities, government agencies, through to the arts, religion, and sport (Kotler & Levy, 1969).

The success of modern marketing, particularly in western society is evident through the rise and maintenance of the market economic system (Dholakia & Firat, 2006). This success is perhaps due to the marketing concept’s ability to encapsulate the essence of modern culture’s most valued institution – democracy. The marketing concept seemingly corresponds well with the promotion of the sovereign citizen whose needs are served by governing institutions. For Vargo and Lusch (2004), modern marketing’s central principals have seldom been challenged, with the area of marketing still viewed as a way of provisioning that which is needed by consumers need – though now of services rather than through a framework of economic exchange.

THE POSTMODERN CONDITION

Firat and Dholakia (2006) summarise that postmodernism is firstly a cultural phenomenon comprised of three consistent attributes; Firstly, postmodernism calls for the recognition that modernism’s grand project of grand-narratives is problematic because of its privileged status within society and ignorance of difference; Secondly, postmodern thought rejects linear existence and the argument that postmodernism did not develop after modernism, but existed before, and during the modern era; Thirdly, postmodernism focuses on the present, rather than emphasis on the past, or the creation of a grand future (Firat & Dholakia 2006).

Kellner (1989) believes this development represents the postmodern turn in consumer society, where universal, exclusive grand narratives are replaced by a social reality constructed by consumers. For Firat and Venkatesh (1995:244), this has a liberatory effect, and challenges society to “practice unabashedly the [postmodern] conditions toward microemancipatory ends-as opposed to grand emancipatory projects”.

THE CHINESE FOOTBALL INDUSTRY

The modern era, particularly within marketing, can be seen to have come to existence through the development of democratic, capitalist society in the west. Although China's recent economic performance is indicative of a shift from communism to more capitalist ideology, societal governance is yet to reflect this transition. Despite this, business activity across multiple industries signal the adoption of modern approaches to management, in more recently, marketing.

This is evidenced considerably in the setting of the professional Chinese football league. Acquisition of non-Chinese players and coaches on salaries which dwarf the nations GDP per capita as well as a rise in short-term operational marketing-driven promotional tactics (Economist 2009) signal China's adoption of modern marketing strategies. The question therefore is – is the adoption of modern marketing techniques suitable for China's professional sport industry? Or could a postmodern perspective offer an alternative approach to marketing.

A POSTMODERN APPROACH

A postmodern orientation to marketing demands that the relationship between the marketing organization and consumers evolves. Rather than having separated entities forced together through economic exchange relationships, participants (managers and consumers) become partners in the construction of needs, wants, desires, and visions (Kozinets, 2002). Here, marketing is not distanced or detached from the consumer, rather it transforms to become a process to empower consumers to construct their own realities, most prolifically through the construction of consumption communities (Cova 1997, 1999, Kozinets 2002).

While the goal in modern marketing was linked to consumer satisfaction, the new postmodern condition redirects marketing to reposition its goal from satisfaction to empowerment (Cova 1999, Kozinets 2002) – emancipating them from the modern regime, and reenchanting the consumer as an active determinant of their own, and the organisation's equity (Firat & Venkatesh, 1995).

This can be facilitated by immersing the postmodern consumer into textual, multifaceted, hedonic experiences (Firat & Dholakia, 2006). Cultural themes nurture impressive immersion into experience, thus rather than adopting marketing regimes fostered under modernist, western approaches, the invocation of a cultural theme requires the presence of a community of participants which cannot be individually evoked, nor individually experienced (Firat & Venkatesh, 1995).

TECHNOLOGICAL RE-ENCHANTMENT

The conceptual shift from satisfaction to empowerment, and subsequent operationalisation in marketing practice could be achieved through the use of technology, such as social media platforms, and gamification of sporting brands. This would allow for postmodern approaches to marketing to exist both during live sporting events and in non-event periods, ultimately facilitating the development of a sporting community. In this author's opinion, this approach would links consumers through shared values, thus empowering them through the nature of consumption and existence within a community of value, rather than simply as an element of exchange.

REFERENCES

- Alderson, W. (1957) Marketing Behavior and Executive Action. Homewood, IL
- Alderson, W. (1965) Dynamic Marketing Behavior: A Functionalist Theory of Marketing. Homewood, IL
- Bagozzi, R.P. (1975) Marketing as Exchange, Journal of Marketing 39(4): 32–9.
- Best, S. and Kellner, D (1997) The Postmodern Turn NY: The Guildford Press
- Cova, B. (1997) Community and consumption: Towards a definition of the “linking value” of product or services, European Journal of Marketing, 31 (3/4) pp.297 – 316
- Cova, B. (1999) ‘From Marketing to Societing: When the Link is More Important than the Thing’, in D. Brownlie, M. Saren, R. Wensley and R. Whittington (eds) Rethinking Marketing: Towards Critical Marketing Accountings, pp. 64–83. London: Sage.
- Economist (2009) The Big League? The Business of Sport in China, Economist Intelligence Unit, Misson Hills, PRC
- Featherstone, M. (1991) Consumer Culture and Postmodernism. London: Sage.
- Firat, A.F. and Dholakia, N (2006) Theoretical and philosophical implications of postmodern debates: some challenges to modern marketing, Marketing Theory 6(2): pp.123-162
- Firat, A.F. and Venkatesh, A. (1995) ‘Liberatory Postmodernism and the Reenchantment of Consumption’, Journal of Consumer Research 22(3): 239–67.
- Foster, H. (ed.) (1983) The Anti-aesthetic: Essays on Postmodern Culture. Townsend, WA
- Gladden, J. M. and Funk, D. C. (2001) Understanding brand loyalty in professional sport: Examining the link between brand associations and brand loyalty, International Journal of Sports Marketing and Sponsorship, (3) 1, pp. 67–94
- Goulding, C. (2002) Grounded Theory, A practical guide for Management, Business, and

Market Researcher, s First Edition, London: Sage

Kellner, D. (1989) Jean Baudrillard: From Marxism to Postmodernism and Beyond. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.

Kotler, P. (1967) Marketing Management: Analysis, Planning, and Control. Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice-Hall.

Kotler, P. (1972) 'A Generic Concept of Marketing', Journal of Marketing 36(2): 46–54.

Kotler, P. and Levy, S.J. (1969) 'Broadening the Concept of Marketing', Journal of Marketing 33(1): 10–15.

Kozinets, R.V. (2002) 'Can Consumers Escape the Market? Emancipatory Illuminations from Burning Man', Journal of Consumer Research 29(1): 20–38.

Liotard, J.-F. (1984) The Postmodern Condition, Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press.

Liotard, J.-F. (1992) The Postmodern Explained. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press.

Vargo, S.L. and Lusch, R.F. (2004) 'Evolving to a New Dominant Logic for Marketing', Journal of Marketing 68(1): 1–17.