“Good and loyal comrades and brave men; they will be remembered as those,
who sacrificed their lives for that, which is the greatest and most glorious thing
in the world - Freedom.”

Captain Carl Arosenius in Hemlandet.
23 Nov. 1864

In Galesburg, Illinois, a military company called Galesburg Light Guards was raised during the fall of 1861. It mustered into service for three years 16 Dec. 1861 as Company C, 43rd Illinois Volunteer Infantry, a regiment otherwise mostly recruited by Germans. When the organizer of the company, the German-born Reverend Dr. Hugo Starkloff, was promoted surgeon of the regiment, Olof Edvall, a carpenter from Galesburg, was elected captain. After Edvall's death in 1862 - of wounds received at the Battle of Shiloh - Carl Arosenius was commissioned captain by the governor of Illinois. Arosenius had been the editor of the Baptist and Republican newspaper Frihetsvännen in Galesburg before the war.

In the spring of 1862, the 43rd Illinois Volunteer Infantry participated in the sieges of Fort Donelson and Fort Henry, Tennessee. The regiment then fought in the bloody Battle of Shiloh 6-7 April 1862. After the battle it took part in the capture of Corinth, Mississippi. It was then marched back to western Tennessee, where it formed a part of the occupation forces from June 1862 to April 1863. Most of that time was spent in Bolivar. During the summer and fall of 1863 the regiment first took part in the capture of Vicksburg, Mississippi, and then in the conquest of Arkansas. In this state it served as provost guard in Little Rock - together with the Third Minnesota Volunteers, another unit with a Swedish company - until March 1864. The regiment then served in the field in Arkansas until May 1865. After the end of hostilities it had to stay as occupation troops in Little Rock until the mustering out, in the same city, 30 Nov. 1865. The final disbanding of the regiment took place in Springfield, Illinois, 22 Dec. 1865.

At the original mustering, Company C numbered 99 officers and men. During the war 30 volunteer recruits were added, all but three of them in 1864. A drafted recruit also joined the company this year. Late in 1863, 34 of the original 99 soldiers, and a volunteer recruit, signed up for a new three-year term as veteran volunteers. This meant that all but 13 of the soldiers still serving became veteran volunteers. The rest of the original enlistment had been lost through casualties, sickness, and discharges for disability. The regiment was reorganized 27 Sept. 1864, and Companies A, B and C were consolidated into one large company, called Company A. The Swedish-born officers from the old Company C officered this new company. The majority of the men were Swedes and the rest were Germans.

The present roster is complete until the reorganization of 27 Sept. 1864. From that date it only contains information about the soldiers who served in the old Company C. Not considered are soldiers who previously served in the old companies A and B, or later recruits, except two recruits born in Sweden.
