Propositions belonging to the Dissertation

The Co-Creation of Services

by Anna-Sophie Oertzen

1. The future belongs to the co-creative enterprise. (Venkat Ramaswamy and Francis Gouillart)
2. Genuine services co-creation that transcends tokenistic approaches to collaboration requires multi-directional communication among the involved parties, who must actively participate and engage in the co-creation process. (This dissertation, Conclusion)
3. The human-centred perspective of service design contributes to co-creation as a process, a toolbox, and a mind-set. (This dissertation, Conclusion)
4. Genuine services co-creation supports institutional change by generating legitimacy through its beneficial outcomes. (This dissertation, Conclusion)
5. Co-creating services requires paradoxical thinking. (This dissertation, Conclusion)
6. Co-creation should not be applied half-heartedly or as a commonly used buzzword; rather, co-creation efforts should be purposefully evaluated with regard to when to use them, which outcomes to pursue, whom to collaborate with, and how to facilitate the process. (Own reflection)
7. When you design for meaning, good things will happen. (Doug Dietz at TEDx San Jose CA)
8. If you want to accomplish things, you cannot sit back and wait for things to happen. You have to go out and happen to things. (Based on Leonardo da Vinci)
9. Coming together is a beginning, keeping together is progress, working together is success. (Edward Everett Hale)
10. Let us build a house, let us make this house our home—together, let us co-create the future!
