

Accreditation: some professors say public is uninformed

By Craig Andrews

Some Cal Poly professors say there is not enough being done to inform the public about accreditation standards for campuses.

"For a lot of us it's really fuzzy," said Randall L. Murray, head of the journalism department.

John Culver, political science department head, said, "I don't think the public is that well informed (about accreditation)."

When people involved in post-secondary education are asked whether they would like to learn more about accreditation, the response is usually a yawn, according to the authors of the 1983 book "Understanding Accreditation" by Kenneth E. Young et al. However, the authors points out, "If they are asked about such subjects as educational quality, institutional accountability, achieving and maintaining high standards and making education responsive to students' and society's needs, the interest level soars."

The first list of accredited institutions appeared in 1913 by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. This marked the first accreditation of institutions of higher learning.

There are two types of accreditation. The first is institutional accreditation, which evaluates a college or university as a whole. The second is professional accreditation, which evaluates individual programs and departments within institutions.

Accreditation means minimum standards have been met in an institution or a specific program, said Walter R. Mark, Cal Poly academic program planner. "It's not always easy to attain (those standards)," he said.

"They certainly don't make their standards known," said Dick Morrow, a counselor at San Luis Obispo Senior High School. "I'm a high school counselor and I don't understand accreditation. I don't

A photographic exhibition that focuses on a painter's use of the camera as an artistic tool is currently on display through Nov. 27 at the Galerie in the University Union.

Patricia Riley, a painter, sculptor and calligrapher, brings "Sensate Observations: Camera Paintings" to Cal Poly in her first solo photographic exhibition. "I concentrate on whatever moves me. I don't want to be typecast. I don't believe you have to pursue one path," she said.

In this exhibition, Riley reveals the various paths she has taken with her camera in New York, Massachusetts, Morro Bay and also in Cambria, where Riley has lived for a year. "This exhibit is the sum total of everything I know. All my education, experiences and sensitivities. It shows my way of seeing," she said.

The Galerie coordinator, Jeanne LaBarbera, sees Riley's work as different from others exhibited in the Galerie because "she is basically a painter and sculptor. This is a painter's view of photography. She emphasizes composition, dramatic diagonals and repeated verticals. Painting ideas are here," LaBarbera said.

"Photography usually implies technical expertise. But I wouldn't call myself a photographer because that would compromise those who do the entire process on their own.

I am an artist who uses a camera like a paintbrush, like clay," Riley explained, adding that technical proficiency doesn't always enable feeling to come through. "I get the heart in," she said.

The camera she uses makes picture-taking simple. It is a Canon SureShot — fully automatic in focusing and light reading. "It does everything but walk the film to the store," Riley said.

The artist takes care of that aspect, having her Kodacolor VR 100 film developed for her at a photo shop in Cambria. "When people are surprised that I don't develop my own work, I can only answer that I never thought it was an issue," she said.

Riley alleviated another factor in the photographic process by not cropping the final product. She had them matted in Van Nuys and then framed them herself. "All the photos were matted and ready to be shown on the flat, black walls of the Galerie. It was ideal," Riley said.

The exhibition is receiving great response from students and the general public alike, according to LaBarbera. "I think it is educational for people to see a painter's-eye view of this world through the camera. I see visitors very in tune with Riley's work," she said.

"My hope is that people will see the me in all my different work," Riley said. "We all leave a fingerprint of our heart and spirit in everything we do."

Decision made by Baker to eliminate UU bowling alley

By Lynette Wong

Staff Writer

President Baker approved a recommendation from Dean of Students Russ Brown last Friday to officially close the University Union bowling alley.

According to Roger Conway, executive director of the U.U., the decision surfaced as a result of a U.U. Advisory Board recommendation which included the Space Allocation Review Committee and Building Expansion Improvement Committee recommendations.

"The UUAB asked the president to remove the bowling lanes in anticipation of new utilization for space," Conway said.

"The Building Expansion and Improvement Committee recommended a fitness facility in that space based on their assessment of competing needs for space," he said.

The closure of the bowling alley results from a combination of factors, Conway said. He said there were about 125-175 people using the lanes more than once a week.

"We don't have the luxury to support programs that have a small following and are so intense in cost and space.

"Recreational sports operates in a small space and they service 10,000 people," he added.

Another factor contributing to the closure of the facility is based on a national decline in the popularity of bowling, said Conway.

He based his statement on an article in the January issue of Bowling Magazine which states, "Bowling is in its 10th consecutive year of decline — its fifth consecutive year of decline in league play — and bowling has lost 80 percent of its former share of the recreational dollar."

He said that from 1979-1985, use of bowling lanes has dropped 9.8 percent both nationally and on campus. "These closely parallel each other," he said.

He added that enrollment in bowling classes fell from 932 students in 1979-80 to 323 in 1984-85.

According to Conway, location posed a problem because the majority of users are off-campus, which tended to cause parking problems.

In regard to repair and condition of the lanes, Conway said it was reaching a point where an overhaul was needed.

According to Conway, a potential recreational facility including weightlifting equipment and an aerobics area may replace the bowling alley. He said that in a detailed analysis of proposed U.U. renovation, "The School of Architecture came up with a true estimate of $183,866.65 to build this facility."

Although the proposed bulk of work will be done by architecture students and two faculty members teaching the students, Conway said they will bid for outside contractors for electrical and heating, ventilation and air conditioning units.

He said faculty and staff will be charged for using the facility but students will get in free except during special events.

Conway emphasized the recreational facility is only a proposal. He said he encourages people to come forth with their ideas about other uses of the facility.

The UUAB will vote on the suggestions Nov. 27.

Bowling alley proponents contend closure of the lanes was a mistake because of the way it was handled and because of a Greg Popovich, recreation administration, senior: Yes. I want out with the old ideas and in with the new.

Danielle deBoisblanc, liberal studies, junior: Yes. The noise ordinance and new housing (small group housing) are important issues and a lot of the candidates views are different on them.

James Schubin, animal science, sophomore: No. Not for this election. I didn't get it in on time after I moved.

Melanie Kakalec, computer science, sophomore: No. I don't really know any of the people running or the issues. I was really interested at home.

Ron Daniels, city and regional planning, graduate student: Yes, though I really haven't followed the campaign that well. I'll have to run through all the election material before I actually vote.

Beth Arago, business, freshman: No. I'm only 17.

Politics and the Great Pumpkin

Every Halloween Linus, from the comic strip "Peanuts," searches for the sincerest pumpkin patch he can find. At 11 a.m. this Halloween I wasn't in a pumpkin patch but in the U.U. Plaza. Instead of looking at pumpkins I was listening to two mayoral and seven city council candidates as each tried to convince the plaza audience that he (or she) had the students' best interests at heart. Like Linus looking at pumpkin patches, I wondered which of these candidates was the most sincere. After all, it's easy to be "pro-student" on campus, but what do these candidates say about students off campus? To find out I decided to look at each candidates' campaign literature. I wanted to see if the student concerns and issues they raised on campus were important enough to be included in their campaign brochures (which are distributed largely off campus).

Both mayoral candidates include student concerns in their brochures. Incumbent Mayor Melanie Billig's brochure cites her "continued dedication to ongoing cooperation between City-County-State-Cal Poly and the business community." The literature of her opponent, City Councilman Ron Dunin, makes even more references to student concerns. "Ron Dunin believes ... Turning downtown parking, fraternity parties, park usage, etc., over to ad hoc committees or consultants is a way to avoid having to make a hard decision." Dunin "supports the establishment of a fraternity and sorority row" and recognizes "a need for concentration of student housing." Also, "he will work hard to increase communications with the County Board of Supervisors and Cal Poly."

Of the seven candidates for city council (there are two seats open) only Lewis, Fowler and Bearce mention student issues in their literature. Paul Lewis, a Cal Poly student, makes many references to student concerns in his brochure. Gary Fowler, who has close ties with the Greek community, recognizes "the needs of housing, parking and community involvement for Cal Poly students, fraternities and sororities" in his literature. One of Ron Bearce's priorities as described in his brochure is the "Creation of a Greek Row for fraternities and sororities to resolve neighborhood conflicts."

It was particularly interesting to me that Agnew and Settle, who both are closely linked to Cal Poly, do not mention student issues in their literature. The words "Cal Poly" or "student" do not appear in Paul Agnew's brochure, even though he is a recent Cal Poly graduate. The closest Councilman Allen Settle's literature comes to mentioning Cal Poly is when it describes Settle as a "University Professor." Settle has taught at Cal Poly for 15 years.

When Linus misjudged the sincerity of a pumpkin patch, he wound up not with the Great Pumpkin but with Snoopy. We could also meet Linus's fate if we misjudge the sincerity of these politicians. Instead of winding up with someone great, we could get stuck with a dog.

Crazy like a fox!!!

Kevin H. Fox...

Excuse me sir, do you have the time?

I can still remember that fateful summer day and the first time anyone ever called me "Sir." I know that sounds ridiculous to most of you, but along with a person's 21st birthday, that is a major rite of passage. I felt so old and mature, working in a bank for the summer and finally getting the recognition for many years of hard work.

This major event of my life would not be remembered today had it not been for a recent shopping trip.

There was the usual exchange of "hello" and "thank-you" between the cashier and customers — the typical social interactions in public places such as grocery stores.

The cashier worked rapidly, as if working for commission, and seemed to have little time for more in-depth conversation.

I approached with the anticipation of talking to the cashier again; she was cute and seemed to be around 21. Maybe it was just wishful thinking, but she seemed to make more time to talk with me, as I was a regular to this shopping location.

As she rang up my purchases, the conversation continued on a light and casual note. I paid for my goods and was preparing to move on, and told her to have a nice day and not to work too hard. To this she responded "Thank-you, SIR!"

I thought I never wanted to hear that word again. I don't want to be a sir, especially to attractive grocery clerks.

It was a sad day. I went on to work and the day seemed to drag on. As I walked away from work, some small kids were selling lemonade on the corner and I thought I would help them raise money for whatever it is that kids raise money for these days.

"Excuse me sir, but do you have the time?" one small boy asked. "Sure, it's 4:30," I responded and ordered a glass of their product. I paid a quarter for the 10-cent glass with only one ice cube in it, and was turning to leave when the smallest and obviously youngest kid said, "Thank you very much, sir."

That word again. I must be getting old, but this time it didn't seem to matter as much. I can still remember my own days of lemonade sales with my brother Will and our parents persistent urging to be polite to our elders.

I can't remember what it was that we used to raise money for, but I am glad that there are still young kids around whose parents teach them to be polite to their elders, even if it is me.

Schultz plans summit agenda

MOSCOW (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz met with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze for nearly eight hours Monday to plan the agenda for this month's U.S.-Soviet summit meeting, which is expected to focus on arms control.

Shultz arrived with a letter from President Reagan to Soviet Leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, but its contents were not disclosed.

Shultz and Shevardnadze talked from noon, through a "working lunch," until about 7:40 p.m. at the elegant Foreign Ministry annex.

Sakharov ends hunger strike

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, speaking with relatives here for the first time in six years, said Monday he is recovering after losing 44 pounds during a hunger strike that ended after the government said his wife would be allowed to leave the country for medical treatment.

Sakharov, 64, and his wife, Yelena Bonner, 62, were contacted by his stepchildren and mother-in-law by telephone in Gorky, where he was exiled in 1980.

Sakharov's voice on the phone was a surprise to the family, which had scheduled the call last week following reports that Mrs. Bonner had been given permission to leave the country. She has been abroad three times for eye treatment, most recently in 1979.

Reagan clarifies 'Star Wars' plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, unveiling a new element of his military policy, said the United States will not deploy its "Star Wars" system to defend against nuclear weapons "until we do away with our nuclear missiles, our offensive missiles."

In an interview published in Moscow today with Soviet journalists, Reagan indicated, however, the United States would not disarm unilaterally and would expect the Soviet Union to dismantle its nuclear arsenals as well.

City elections

Three measures on the ballot

By Susan Harris
Staff Writer

Three amendments to the San Luis Obispo city charter will be decided upon in the elections today: determining the length of term for councilmembers, possibly creating new publication guidelines for changes in the municipal code and setting a development policy for annexed land.

Measure C would regulate the amount of time that a mayor or councilmember can stay in the same office to a maximum of eight years. When someone is elected or appointed due to a vacancy during the term, that period of time will be counted toward the eight year limit only if the remaining time is over half of a regular term.

If adopted there would not be any fiscal impact other than having to hold fewer special elections in order to fill vacancies.

The current charter requires that any change in a subsection of the municipal code must have the entire section of the code published in a local newspaper. Measure D, if adopted, would amend the charter so that only the specific portion that is changed would need to be published.

If Measure D passes, minor fiscal savings would result in lessened clerical, administrative and advertising costs.

Measure E, if adopted, would provide that lands annexed to the city may only be developed if it follows the general plan of the city. At present, the charter requires cities to enact rules and regulations that do not need to be consistent with the general plan.

There will be no fiscal impact if Measure E passes.

Congratulations to the following:
 □ Ornamental horticulture — this Cal Poly department is now able to use hard-disc computer storage for teaching materials, correspondence, alumni mailing lists and other files as a result of a gift from a Texas firm.

Commercial Drywall Inc. of Houston, Texas, donated the equipment making possible the elimination of the floppy discs which had been used to store files developed on the department microcomputers. The large capacity of the new system should meet departmental needs for at least the next two years, according to department head Ron Regan.

□ Graphic communication — this Cal Poly department was the recent recipient of two LogE/Robertson micro digital vertical cameras and a LogEline 25 rapid access processor. The gift, valued at $25,000, was made by LogEtronics Inc. of Springfield, Va.

The equipment will be used in a graphic arts photography laboratory under the supervision of Joseph Truex, a veteran professor with more than 30 years of experience in graphic arts photography education.

In addition, the cameras and processor will be available to University Graphic Systems, the simulated printing and publishing company in which students receive practical experience.

□ John Matthew Hermle — has been selected by his brothers in Phi Kappa Psi fraternity as the Summerfield Scholar of the year. This award is available annually in each of the 90 chapters of the fraternity for presentation to a member who, in the opinion of his fellow brothers, has achieved an excellent record of good scholarship in combination with demonstrated leadership qualities and worthwhile contributions to the university and to his fraternity.

The award includes $100 and qualifies Hermle for a final overall judgment when an Outstanding Scholar of the Year is chosen.

ACCREDITATION

even know how a college gets accredited," he said.

According to the Cal Poly catalog, "The university is fully approved as a four-year, degree-granting institution by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges." WASC is approved by the Council on Post-Secondary Accreditation.

There are nine basic areas of standardization a post-secondary institution must fulfill before it can become accredited, according to the WASC Handbook of Accreditation for Senior Colleges and Universities.

Institutional integrity is the first standard. An institution must manage its affairs, including finances, with honesty. Goals must be specified and publicized, along with the means of achieving them. Students are assured the right of due process and redress of grievances. Academic freedom and truth in the way an institution presents itself are stressed.

The second standard states institutions must be guided by clearly stated purposes. The statement of purposes must define the distinctive character of the institution.

Standard three outlines procedures for establishing a governing board and defines the role of the board. This standard requires the roles of administrators, faculty and students be clearly stated.

The fourth standard provides general requirements for educational programs. Programs must be consistent with the purposes of the institution. There must be systematic academic planning.

Faculty selection procedures, faculty functions and personnel policies are specified in the fifth standard. Qualifications of faculty are outlined, as are regulations indicating suitable proportions of faculty to students.

Standard six states "Library holdings, computers and other learning resources are sufficient in quantity, depth, diversity and currentness to support all the institution's academic offerings at appropriate levels."

Standard seven requires institutional support for student services and co-curricular student activities.

Standard eight states instructional support facilities must adequately provide for the purposes of the institution. These facilities include laboratories, office space, buildings, grounds and equipment.

Standard nine requires sufficient financial resources "to enhance the educational resources to which the institution is committed."

The status of accreditation for a post-secondary institution (specializing in programs over two years in length) indicates that an institution has met these nine standards. However, Mark pointed out that just because these standards have been met, it doesn't necessarily mean they are ready for accreditation. An institution must also go through a period of intensive self-evaluations.

Tomorrow, in part two, the effects and perceptions of accreditation which are manifested at an institution will be examined.

controversy in cost estimates.

"I feel they made the wrong decision from the start. UUAB did not receive factual material at the meeting. They were given a bias. They voted after they were told that the bowling alley would lose $280,000 in five years. This is completely wrong. Don Stote (a proprietor of Pismo Bowl in Pismo Beach) had a report saying it would only cost $13,000 to bring up the condition of the bowling alley that a proprietor in the private sector would demand," said Gail Wilson, a Cal Poly chemistry instructor.

"When the Student Senate voted to keep it, Conway said they would have to stay and rework the budget," Wilson said. "After midnight, they took a revote and some of them changed their vote."

She said the bowling alley could have been sustained if it was leased to a private proprietor. She also said the facility could make a profit by raising prices because users are charged only half as much as at Laurel Lanes.

Wilson said the cost of building the recreational facility will exceed the $200,000 that Conway estimated.

"Conway would spend over $200,000 to convert the bowling alley to weight lifting and aerobics. This is guaranteed to lose initial money. If fire sprinklers are put in, this will go over the $200,000 because Conway will have to bid out. You can't have student labor if it costs more than $200,000.

"UUAB was led to believe that the bowling alley would lose a lot of money if it was kept when in fact, students will lose the money invested in the bowling alley," Wilson said.

Airborn goalie Eric Nelson saves one for the Mustangs in a win over Pomona.

Poly goes for the glory but last minute play fails

By Tim Robinson
Special to the Daily

Saturday evening in Sacramento, Cal Poly football Coach Jim Sanderson may have felt the same anguish that Nebraska's Coach Tom Osborne felt after his team lost a National Championship in the famous 1984 Miami-Nebraska Orange Bowl. Both coaches, in this case, chose to play for the win instead of the tie and both came out behind in points.

Some consolation exists, however, as the Mustangs didn't lose a National Championship, but they still felt the pain of losing a game in the final seconds. The decision to go for the two-point conversion came after the Mustangs pulled within a point of the Sacramento Hornets, 28-27, with 20 seconds left in the game. Sanderson's decision to go for it held no doubts.

"No question! When we first started the drive with two or three minutes to go in the ball game, I got together with Coach Grosz (Poly's offensive coordinator) and indicated that we were going for the two point play. There was no question ... as to what we were going to do ... there was no advantage to play for the tie. The only reason you might go for the tie is if a National Championship is on the line ... and in our situation what was important was winning," said Sanderson.

The play, which had worked earlier for a Mustang touchdown in the first quarter, failed as senior quarterback Robert Perez had his pass deflected off both defenders and pass receivers alike. The ball finally came to rest on the grass of Hornet Stadium and so did the Mustangs' chance for a win.

The two-point conversion was the only choice Sanderson and his staff considered. The Mustangs, in need of a win to stay alive in the Western Football Conference, once again dominated the statistic sheets. Poly marched up and down the field for more than 500 total yards in offense, yet trailed in the only numbers that are important at the end of the game — the score.

The Mustangs, 3-5 on the season, trailed 21-14 at the half and 27-21 with 4:55 left in the game when they started their final drive. The drive ended with senior fullback Joey Kolina going over for the score from the one-yard line. The identical play which had worked for a four-yard touchdown pass for Poly in the opening drive, became the Mustangs' epitaph in their final drive.

Perez, making his fifth start for the Mustang offense, has become comfortable in his role as a starter and decided to do his version of "Air Perez" on Saturday. He broke school records in completions, attempts and yardage — not bad for a kid who took his first snap as a varsity quarterback about a month ago.

However, Perez's 24 completions on 48 attempts for 327 yards were not enough to overcome the four turnovers made by the offense.

Despite an impressive offensive performance, the Mustangs could not afford the four turnovers which occurred inside the 15 and 10 yardlines. Two of Poly's turnovers resulted in touchdowns for the Hornets, which made a big difference on the scoreboard. Sacramento now holds a 6-2 record, and boasts one of the biggest and heaviest defensive lines in the WFC.

Poly's defense did an excellent job, considering their obvious size disadvantage. For the most part, the Mustang defense did its normal rubber band imitation by bending and not breaking, however, Poly still gave up the big plays allowing Sacramento to score three touchdowns and two fieldgoals.

It is now a season of pride for Cal Poly. The Mustangs, who are out of any post-season picture, have three games left in the 1985 season. They also still have a shot at a winning season, which will always be a part of the green and gold pride.

Poly blanks Broncos

By John Baker
Special to the Daily

The Cal Poly men's soccer team clashed against a very aggressive Cal Poly Pomona team Friday, and the Mustangs conquered the Broncos 1-0 to hold on to third place in the California Collegiate Athletic Association.

Mustang kicker Dan Campbell put in his eighth CCAA goal of the season, as he leaped above the Bronco defenders to head the ball into the goal from a Pat Dwyer's pass for the only score in the match.

Mustang Coach Wolfgang Gartner said that Paul Wraith, Dave Shively and Mike Panconi all played very well.

The Mustangs boosted their league record to 5-3-1, and will travel to St. Mary's College Tuesday. Cal-Poly returns home Friday for the last home game and league match of the 1985 season against Cal State Bakersfield at 7:30 p.m. in Mustang Stadium.
