Students to profit from $4.25 minimum wage

By Megan Owings
Staff Writer

With California's minimum wage going up as of July 1, students employed at Cal Poly will be feeling the benefits of more pay for their work.

The increase — from $3.35 an hour to $4.25 an hour — will happen only in California. It is the first time since 1981 that the state will have raised its minimum wage.

"The increase in minimum wage will definitely affect us," said Al Amaral, Foundation executive director. "But it won't be too bad because what Cal Poly pays students is generally higher than whatever the minimum wage is."

Amaral said that even though the minimum is at $3.35 an hour right now, Cal Poly's average wage for students, student assistants and work study students is $3.50 to $3.75 an hour.

"With the increase, students' average wage at Cal Poly will probably be around $4.50 an hour," Amaral said.

The money received from the state by Cal Poly does not go to Foundation services. Amaral said that while Cal Poly receives money that is approved by the state Legislature and the government through state taxes, the Foundation generates its own money. From that it is able to pay its expenses, such as student labor.

"We make our money through facilities such as selling textbooks at El Corral, selling livestock, work produced at University Graphics Systems and more," Amaral said. "Our money is maybe a little more secure. State money may be volatile just because of the politics they're dealing with."

Amaral said the minimum wage increase will cause somewhat of a ripple effect in price increase both at Cal Poly and San Luis Obispo.

"Some prices will reflect the increase in pay but I don't think it will be all at once," Amaral said. "It will definitely affect Cal Poly's price for resale."

He said the Foundation has managed to keep the price increase for meal plans down to 5 percent, while the increase from the current minimum wage to $4.25 is 27 percent.

"There is no way that the increase in pay and the increase in cost will equal," Amaral said. "People will be making more now but I don't think it will lend itself to people saving more."

"There is a general acceptance of the increase in the wage," Amaral said. "Given the inflation that has occurred since minimum wage went up to what it is now, I think it's long overdue. Everything else has gone up in price; it's about time that

Graduates need bucks for tickets, diplomas

By Shelly Evans
Staff Writer

"You can't be 5-11. You can be 5-10, but you can't be 5-11," a grad center clerk explained to an anxious engineering student desperate for his long-awaited graduation gown.

Prospective grads have until June 10 to hit the graduation center, located in the back of El Corral Bookstore, for their caps, gowns and instruction sheet explaining where and at what time students should meet before the ceremony. June 1 is the deadline to buy the five graduation tickets. Students who wait until after the deadline risk not getting guest tickets.

"Everyone's really psyched until they find out they have to pay $10 to graduate," said Holly Peterson, a student worker in the bookstore.

The $10 commencement fee covers the paper work needed to get grads through the ceremony and out of administrative hands. An additional $10 fee is charged for caps and gowns.

Diplomas may also be ordered through the grad center. One small, 7-by-9 inch, diploma may be ordered at no charge. A diploma cover costs $5 and a large, 11-by-14 inch diploma is $8. Covers are not available for the large diplomas.

Janet Carlstrom, a customer service supervisor at El Corral, said diploma orders are sent to the Records Office, where grades and graduate status are verified. Graduates receive their diplomas about three months after graduation.

"Some people don't want a diploma," Carlstrom said. "It's just a piece of paper to some people."

But Clara West, a grad center clerk, said most students do order diplomas.

"Two years ago, a Mexican-American student came in to order some diplomas," West said. "He was the first person in his entire family to graduate

City plans annexation of property by airport

By Shelly Head
Staff Writer

The city of San Luis Obispo plans to annex 1,000 acres of unincorporated, public and privately owned property near the county airport over the next 20 years.

This preliminary "specific plan," concerning property that runs between South Higuera and Broad streets, was discussed at a meeting between the San Luis Obispo Board of Supervisors and the Airport Land Use Commission last week at the County Government Center.

Michael Draze, a senior officer on the Airport Land Use Commission staff, said the main purpose of the meeting was to discuss what background data had been developed toward the city's annexing the land and what the proposed direction of the plan would be. However, he said discussions on the plan have just begun and that no decisions have been made.

Draze said the plan would be a joint venture between property owners and the city and county. But he said that since most of the property is privately owned, except for the airport and roads, there have been individual disagreements about how the land will be used and how the plan should be implemented.

"Everybody's working together to facilitate the development of the area; they all want it to happen," he said. "But there's disagreement (in that) they don't all want it to happen in the same way."

Draze said the main purpose of the plan will be for the city to

Education, water main concerns to debating Assembly candidates

All agree on state's need for more educational money

By Christine Kohn
Staff Writer

Education, California's water project and catastrophic health insurance were topics debated last week by candidates for the 29th District State Assembly.

The debate was sponsored by the Senior Forum. "Education is an issue that is a disgrace to the people of California," said Democrat Chuck Comstock. "California is one of the wealthiest states in the nation, and yet it is 47th in percentage of personal income spent for education."

"I will support any legislation or ballot initiative which would provide the additional resources needed to move California out of the class-size cellar," he said.

Comstock pointed out the lack of young people attracted to teaching.

"Salaries are not competitive with other occupations requiring similar education," said Comstock. "I will support all efforts to make teaching salaries more attractive and will urge the Legislature to address the problems related to working conditions of teachers."

Progress has been made in improving the amount of money spent per pupil in California, said Leslie Ramsey, administrative assistant to Republican incumbent Eric Seastrand.

Seastrand, in legislative session at the time of the debate, supported Senate Bill 813, the omnibus education funding and reform bill of 1983, said Ramsey. "We've put an additional $7 billion into education over the last six years," he said.

Progress has also been made in the area of student/teacher ratio, Ramsey said.

"We may think we have a high student/teacher ratio, but when you take into consideration the number of classroom aids, and reading and math specialists, you'll find that California is in a pretty good position compared to many other states nationwide," she said.

Education would be a top priority, said Jan Bradford, another Democratic candidate. Although she did not discuss the topic in detail during the debate, in an earlier interview she said: "The kids in California deserve the best possible opportunity for a good education."

With a 20 percent dropout rate in California high schools and cutbacks at community colleges, schools are not properly preparing students, said

SECOND OPINION

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

On the Persian Gulf war: The Reagan Administration's decision to expand its umbrella of military protection in the gulf is a limited and reasonable extension of United States policy. The oil industry, merchant shippers and gulf Arab states, feeling insecure amid the continuing shells of the Iran-Iraq war, largely welcome the U.S. policy shift. Iran, however, views the change as increasing "neutral" Washington's tilt toward Iraq.

The United States is on target in its efforts to keep its gulf policy firm, restrained and low key. Most important is that the United States be clear about, and continue to make clear, its limited gulf mission as it continues to search for ways to end the war. The greater the clarification, the less the risk.

The New York Times

On housing for the poor: Anyone who thinks the shortage of affordable housing is bad now need only look forward. "Homeless" does not simply describe thousands of low- and moderate-income families that have no suitable place to live today. Under existing law, thousands of homes occupied by poor families will soon soar in price, driving ever more people to the streets.

It may be time to think about reviving public housing. At the very least, the benefits of public and private housing alternatives need serious study in light of recent experience.

There's every reason for Congress to start that process now. The housing crisis is turning into a true national emergency, one that fully merits a deeper look at public ownership.

Los Angeles Times

On sexually transmitted disease: The unexpected outbreak of syphilis in Los Angeles County highlights two failings — a failure in resources and organization of the public-health program and a failure to affect behavior in the black and Latino communities with the safer-sex education programs.

The Department of Health Services needs to develop a more responsive and flexible organization. All levels of government will need to re-examine the adequacy of funding for the sexually transmitted disease programs. And for informed citizens there are new reasons to avoid high-risk sexual activities.

San Francisco Chronicle

On an overzealous Coast Guard: Under its "zero tolerance" drug policy, the Coast Guard is going after and seizing crafts on which as little as 1/10 of an ounce of marijuana has been found.

Like most federal agencies, the Coast Guard has undergone severe budget cuts that have sharply reduced its ability to perform its basic duties. It does not need to waste time and resources chasing after meaningless headlines in an election year. It should be permitted to honor the U.S. Constitution, which says, "Excessive bail should not be required, nor excessive fines imposed."

I'd better wed before I'm dead

You know you're getting older when:

- your parents retire and force you to support yourself.
- your pets who were puppies and kitties when you were 1 start dying.
- your friends start getting married.

I can handle the first two, but now that "Experienced Bridesmaid" appears on my resume, I'm starting to worry. All of a sudden, it seems like my long-time friends are at that age — past the mother-daughter/father-son talks and into the exciting/frightening/grown-up world of wedded bliss.

If they are at that age, well then so am I. But it's a decision based on the individual, right? Someone may be ready to face that aisle (and actually walk down it) at 18 — others not until 30. Me? Who knows? People have told me I need a husband first.

Honestly, I won't be ready until after graduation, that ominous date that slips further toward the 21st century every quarter. I said I'd be ready, I didn't say I'd have a man yet.

Since high school, I've seen or heard of countless friends burying the hatchet. To me, marriage is like waking up one morning and being an adult. Scary thought.

Unfortunately, many brides and grooms fail to leave childhood/sluthood/gigolohood — whatever you want to call it — and continue their irresponsibility and immaturity even after the vows have been recited. God help the souls who marry these creeps. "Fatal Attraction" was way overdue.

But all my "mature" friends say they have Mr./Ms. Perfect in their grasp. What is it that has compelled them to say "I do?" The American Dream? The white picket fence? Few achieve either, as our 50 percent divorce rate tells us. Maybe it's the one-carat rock on their finger. Or, maybe even true love results in marriage. What a concept.

That's what I'm after: my Mr. Right; my knight in shining armor; that gushy feeling inside that melts my knees, moistens my palms and plunges me back to Sweet, but Silly 16.

PAST DEADLINE

Donna Taylor

But for now, I just go to all these weddings, cry when they kiss, and go home and eat Pop Tarts. This December, I even get to be maid of honor at my best friend's Big W. I'm moving up in the world. No longer just a measly bridesmaid. Promotion in the competitive world of maid-choosing.

OK, OK, so I'm jealous. So I would rather be in that white flowing gown, the center of attention instead of in some uncomfortable, plain-Jane getup that looks just like the other wannabes', I mean bridesmaids'.

I guess my day will come. At least that's what I keep hearing. And I'll have you know it will be the best, happiest, stupidest, scariest day of my life, dammit.

And another thing. Only once will that aisle feel the caress of my 20-foot train gliding along its path. Only once will it be moistened by my tears (not of joy but of my scrunched toes screaming in pain). And only once will all my jealous friends fake their smiles as I float by.

But by then they'll probably be too busy spilling Geritol on their knitted shawls to notice.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Republican values crucial for voters

Editor — A round of applause and a hearty handshake to Ted Waddell for his article "The Reagan Legacy" (May 11). It was well-written, without cutesy retorts or satirical comments as seen in Part 1. It was concise. It let the facts speak for themselves.

I do not wholeheartedly agree with all the policies and actions attributed to Reagan; on the contrary, I hold many reservations. However, I do endorse the motives and thinking behind such policies. Although I agree very strongly with the ideals held by the Republican party, I do not consider myself Republican, nor do I consider myself a Democrat. I am an American citizen. Moreover, I am a world citizen. But do not let this imply that as a citizen of the world I feel it is right for government to take away incentive in the form of profit from the able and "allocate" this money to others, thereby creating even less incentive. Isn't it incentive that built this country? If I am to help out my fellow human being it will be because of my own concern and personal decisions, not because a government has forced me at gunpoint (i.e. laws) to do so. What good does force create for the benefactor or the beneficiary? How genuine is a forced fraternity?

The most significant part of Waddell's essay came in the third paragraph. There he stated the basics on which America has been built and consequently what Reagan has pursued: "(Reagan emphasized) that we must recognize our society will be weakened if we confuse equal opportunity with sameness. That government's main purpose is to ensure the protection of the rights of individuals."

Ponder these ideas for what they mean and not simply disregard them for their lack of your faith. We need to keep these values in mind when listening to politicians and casting our votes.

Tutorial solution

Editor — Here is one possible solution to the problem of insufficient tutorial funding which your readers may want to criticize.

Have tutees either volunteer or sign a contract with the Tutorial Center offering their future services which they themselves originally received. For every hour of tutoring one receives, he or she can agree to be available to the center over a future period (prior to graduation) as repayment for past tutorial services.

This arrangement may help to alleviate the financial burden placed on the Tutorial Center by eliminating much of the cost of hiring tutors, although it would admittedly take time for the center to achieve this status. The minimal amount of funding the center has been appropriated can be a buffer for areas where there are an insufficient number of "creditor tutors" available to cover the demand.

In addition, the university can establish appropriate guidelines and minimum standards. For example, if deemed appropriate, students who meet a minimum grade standard after receiving aid from the Tutorial Center may qualify to tutor another in that course or in a prerequisite of that course. The student can agree to offer equal time for free tutorial services in any field where he or she meets the minimum requirements.

If also deemed appropriate, students could be required to repay a portion of their tutor's fees if that student does not qualify to tutor any subject by the time he or she graduates. In addition to acting as an incentive, this amendment can help cover some of the costs associated with unreplenishing the tutorial pool.

Report: Year-old plutonium spill wasn't threat to health

LIVERMORE, Calif. (AP) — A small plutonium spill at Lawrence Livermore Laboratory in May 1987 left higher-than-normal amounts of the radioactive substance in lab sewage for several months but didn't pose a health threat, said a recently released environmental report.

Lab spokeswoman Bonnie Jean Barringer said the trace amount of plutonium was well below levels that must be reported to health officials.

"Imagine an eye-dropper with a drop of water coming out," she said. "The amount was one-ten-thousandth of that drop."

Because the amount was so small, sophisticated monitoring equipment didn't detect it in lab sewage, but samples routinely analyzed in the laboratory later found the plutonium, the lab said.

The location where the spill began has been found, but cause of the accident is still under investigation, Barringer said.

The amount of plutonium released in 1987 was 36 times the 1986 level, said the lab's annual environmental report.

Marylia Kelly of an environmental group called Tri-Valley CARES, criticized the lab for not reporting the spill and said there could have been others.

Meese fires chief spokesman for not defending him well

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III fired the Justice Department's chief spokesman for allegedly not defending him aggressively enough, and the head of Meese's speech-writing unit then abruptly handed in his resignation Monday.

In a letter, Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland said he had been relieved of his duties Friday and that he had defended Meese "to the best of my ability," while "exercising good judgment and acting in a manner consistent with the obligations of this office."

"You have concluded that my efforts have not sufficed," Eastland wrote the attorney general, who had appointed him public affairs director in April 1985.

Eastland, 38, is a staunch political conservative who has helped craft many of Meese's most controversial speeches on subjects ranging from civil rights policies to criticisms of Supreme Court rulings.

His dismissal is the latest in a string of departures that began March 29 when Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns and criminal division chief William Weld quit out of concern that Meese's continued tenure as attorney general in the face of a criminal probe was hurting the Justice Department's operations, morale and public image.

Boeing grabs largest share of commercial airplane order

BEVERLY HILLS (AP) — The biggest commercial airplane order in history was split Monday between Boeing Co. and Airbus Industrie of Europe, with Boeing grabbing the lion's share of the $5.04 billion, 130-plane purchase.

The planes were purchased by International Lease Finance Corp., which leases planes to many of the world's airlines for periods of three to 11 years. They will be delivered over the next six years.

All are so-called advanced technology planes, which have relatively quiet engines and incorporate other recent developments.

Boeing's workhorse 737 series snagged the biggest chunk of the order — 72 of the 100 Boeing planes ordered — and a mix of wide-body and jumbo jets make up the rest of the purchase from the Seattle company. The Boeing order is worth $3.69 billion.

Airbus, a consortium of European aerospace companies led by its French and German partners, will sell the leasing company 30 planes for $1.35 billion. Eighteen of the Airbus planes will be A320-200s, medium-range airliners similar to the 737, and the rest of the order is for wide-body jets.

Both manufacturers termed the agreement a marketing victory.

annex and develop the 1,000 acres of land and incorporate it into the city. He said this area is not a part of the city and therefore it lacks access to public sewers, a centralized water service, the ability to develop property to a higher density (put more buildings and people on it), the ability to solve traffic problems and the ability to enhance the community.

Draze said a big consideration in the development of this area is that it "... has to be developed so as not to create a danger for the occupants of the property from aircraft and to not endanger the life of the airport."

Paul Gimer, San Luis Obispo Airport manager, said, "It is extremely necessary from the standpoint of continued airport operations that the land-use around (the airport) be carefully planned."

Gimer said though the area being studied in this specific plan represents 20 percent or less of the total land around the airport,

"... it is land which is directly beneath the principle departure path from the airport and the inclement weather arrival path and, therefore, this is one of the most critical areas from a land-use standpoint."

Gimer said one thing good thing about the plan is that the land uses identified for beneath the extended runway center are for mainly recreational uses or industrial applications which are both generally compatible with the airport.

Something that Gimer said really concerns him, however, is the resident housing units included in the proposed land uses.

"All residential uses cause me great concern because noise and overflight at the airport have been argued to be incompatible with the existing residential in the airport area," he said.

Gimer said another concern of his is that the flight paths and the safety zones necessary in land-use planning are not depicted on the maps in the area of the study.

Another major concern about the plan was discussed by Austin Carlton, an assistant planning engineer for CalTrans District 5 in San Luis Obispo. He said his main concern with the plan is that the traffic on and near the land will greatly increase if incorporated, and CalTrans does not have the funding available for the expansion of Highway 101 and Broad Street to six lanes, necessary to accommodate increased traffic.

The next Airport Land Use Commission meeting will be held May 18 at 1:30 p.m. in the County Government Center Room 224.

DEBATE

Bradford.

"Education is the best investment," she said. "When the state invests money into the schools it gets it back through graduates getting better jobs and paying higher taxes."

With rapid advances in technology, education need not stop after formal schooling has ended, said Bradford.

"In just about every area things change so rapidly," she said. "Forget the idea that you are through with education. Look toward a program of lifetime education through supplemental training."

In response to a question about the state's water project that would include an aquaduct running from the eastern Central Valley to the Central Coast, the Democratic candidates agreed that there are better ways to get water.

"I think that there are other more cost-effective ways to get our water," said Bradford. "And although the decision whether or not to use the state water project rests with the county, our assembly representative could make sure we get our share of the water if we did decide to go for it."

The water project will be needed if the issue of continued growth in the district is left unattended, said Comstock.

"As of now, we don't need it," he said. "Nobody has given us a definite price of how much it would cost the people of this area, and nobody has given a guarantee that in a dry year the people would even get any of that state water."

"Mr. Seastrand's position has been to say, go ahead and have the environmental-impact report prepared," said Ramsey. "Take a look at all of our options."

Some seniors in the audience criticized Seastrand for not supporting Assembly Bill 2020, which called for comprehensive medical care from crib to grave.

"With AB 2020, it's a question of looking at the broader scope of how we could best serve the citizens of California," said Ramsey. "Ultimately, the way we understood AB 2020 to be, the people who are well in the state would end up subsidizing all those who were not well enough to have their own private insurance."

"A health-insurance policy such as this should probably be done on a national level and not on a state-by-state basis, if we're going to keep from attracting a lot of people who would come here just to take advantage of those nice benefits," she said.

Comstock would support a bill similar to AB 2020, he said.

"I was disappointed that nothing came out of AB 2020," said Comstock. "One of my friends discovered that he has a disease that hasn't even been diagnosed yet. This man had to sell his home and all of his belongings. His wife is now in dire straits just because they don't have this kind of insurance. I would do all that I can to get some type of bill like AB 2020 passed."

The state needs to initiate a program for catastrophic health insurance, said Bradford.

"AB 2020 had the support of over 100 community organizations and had 24 co-authors," he said. "That bill should be resurrected, and the representative should support that legislation."

Registered voters will determine the Democratic candidate for 29th District State Assembly June 7, in the California primary.

•Greek Week event winners were Theta Chi fraternity and Alpha Phi sorority. Theta Chi took first on crew team, and the tub and chariot races. The fraternity took second place in the bike race. Outstanding brothers were Eric McClaskey and Dave Carlson. The fraternity has won Greek Week 12 out of the past 15 years. Alpha Phi sorority won first place in swimming and team triathlon. The sorority tied with Sigma Chi for second in the Greek sing and won third place in volleyball.

•Greg McIntosh, Cal Poly aeronautical engineering junior, and his wife, Kristina, won $1,200 from the television show "Win, Lose or Draw."

•Cal Poly civil engineering senior Robert Bertini received the first Ann and Gordon Getty Award presented to a student in the orchestra or chamber music program. Bertini, who plays French Horn, is a member of the Cal Poly Symphonic Band.

•Ornamental horticulture students were top place winners in national flower judging and floral design competitions held recently at the University of Illinois. In the 47th annual National Intercollegiate Flower Judging Contest, Janine Palermo, a senior, took first in the cut flower judging event, sixth in judging potted plants, and was third-highest individual in the judging competition, leading Cal Poly to second in that contest. In the 1988 National Intercollegiate Flower Design Contest, sophomore Gina Sorrenti took first in the centerpiece class of the non-professional division. Senior Rachel Smilovitz also won a first place, in the symmetrical oval class entry, also non-professional. Palermo took second for her

Close races, crowded streets characterize annual San Luis Obispo-Hind Criterium

By Rob Lorenz
Staff Writer

Thousands of people lined the downtown streets Saturday to watch the 15th Annual San Luis Obispo Criterium, and if they were hoping for a close race, they certainly got one in the men's professional I, II race.

The pro race, which was the last of five races to be held Sunday in downtown San Luis Obispo, came down to the final lap. There were no clear leaders as the pack passed the start/finish line and heard the bell, but as the cyclists began to round turn four, it was clear that someone had gained a slight advantage on the backside of the course. John Brady managed to hold on to that slight lead, as he crossed the finish line in first place.

Brady, who is from Ireland and rides for the ICN/La Grange cycling club, decided to enter the race on Saturday.

"I usually try and ride a bit more aggressive than I did today," he said. "I've been sick recently so I wasn't sure what my form would be like, so I didn't take too many chances. I guess it worked out."

Brady achieved his victory over a number of well-known cycling names, including two members of the prestigious 7-Eleven team and Thurlow Rogers, who is one of the top riders in the United States and had flown in from the East Coast to compete in the race.

"The race seemed like tag-team wrestling at the beginning," said Rogers. "Everyone was bumping and knocking into each other."

The second-place finisher was Evan Teske of Schwinn Veloce, and the third-place finisher was Jay Vonderahe of Conejo Velo.

The women's race also had a surprise winner. Kim Applegate of Oakland broke away from the pack with two laps to go and won pulling away. A local favorite, Kim Cashon of Los Osos, finished in the top 15. The second-place finisher was Linda Breneman, and Sharon Rodgers took third.

Other winners included John McKinley of Plymouth-Reebok in the Junior race; Stanley Bonn of the San Diego Club in the Senior 3 race; and Steve Vilhauer of S. Sierra Cyclists in the Senior 4 race.

The biggest winner of the day had to be Brady, however.

"I was here last year, and I came in 11th," he said. "This is one of the best crowds I've ever seen."

John McKinley, led Team Plymouth-Reebok to a 1-2-5 finish.
