Anderson/Berdial win election

By Cathy Ayers

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Alison Anderson and Olga Berdial won Associated Student Inc. president and vice president in Wednesday's runoff election.

Anna Balatti read the election results at the Board of Directors meeting.

Anderson, a civil engineering senior, and Berdial, a journalism senior, took 59 percent of the votes, with 1,410 total votes. Kaitlin Ayers and Pedro Vazquez took 41 percent of the votes, with 972 votes total. In the initial election, Anderson and Berdial received 42.7 percent of the vote, while Ayers and Vazquez received 29.4 percent.

"We would just like to thank everyone for voting for us," Berdial said. "We will work hard and make them glad that they voted for us."

The pair said they plan on beginning work this summer.

Anderson and Berdial are concerned with issues such as class availability and fee increases, they said in an April 30 Mustang Daily article. They said they plan to inform students about where their money is going.

Anderson and Berdial set a limit of $500 for themselves before the election. Anderson said that they spent about $470 between both the primary and the runoff elections.

"A few times, we didn't think that we could stick with the limit and still win, but we did," Anderson said.

Civil engineering senior Alison Anderson was elected ASI's 2003-04 president. Journalism senior Olga Berdial was elected vice president.

MUSTANG DAILY

Berdial and Anderson said John Paasch and Luke Parnell's backing of Ayers and Vazquez posed a challenge.

"They were both very good competitors," Berdial said. "It was like two teams backing each other, so it was intimidating."

A total of 2,382 students voted in the runoff election, representing approximately 14 percent of the total student body. The total is 744 fewer students than the 18 percent who voted in the primary election.

Berdial said she was concerned about a low voter turnout, but she expected it.

"The past few days we have been getting the word out and just telling people to vote," she said.

The pair thanked the people who voted for them as well as those who helped with their campaign.

"They are the ones who got us here and took us home," Anderson said. "We had an amazing amount of help."

Poly porn resolution voted down at exec meeting

By Laura Newman

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Cal Poly faculty, staff and students will be able to continue viewing pornographic images from state computing resources on campus.

A resolution to prevent the viewing of Internet pornography at Cal Poly was quashed Tuesday at the executive committee meeting of the Academic Senate.

The executive committee voted 6-4 by secret ballot not to allow the "Resolution to Clarify the Cal Poly Information Technology Responsible Use Policy Regarding Personal Viewing of Sexually Explicit or Offensive Material" to be agendaized and voted on in the full Academic Senate meeting.

"Secret ballots allow members to truly vote in accord with their beliefs and convictions on sensitive matters," Academic Senate chair Unny Menon said. "This is a very sensitive issue and getting the true sense of each voter was seen as important enough to warrant a secret ballot."

Materials engineering department head Linda Vanasupa is the author and driving force behind the resolution. She said the executive committee's decision to nullify her resolution is unfortunate.

CommUnity Pride Week begins today

By Valerie Angelo

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Cal Poly is beginning its celebration of the third annual CommUnity Pride Week entitled "Be the Change" today.

The event will focus on diversity and encourage social awareness within the campus.

Cal Poly Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals United members have worked extensively to create this year's CommUnity Pride Week. The event signifies the individuality of gays, lesbians and bisexuals throughout campus. Sponsors such as Associated Students Inc., the Multicultural Center, Student Life and Leadership, SLO Community Foundation and the Pride Alliance have donated in support of GLBU's contributions toward alliance.

"Pride week is a celebration that brings awareness to GLBU issues," said Maya Andlig, Pride Alliance coordinator. "There is an educational component to Pride. It's not just everyone who is gay stand up. A large part of it is to create a campus of allies."

Several events will take place throughout the week starting at 5:30 p.m. today in Yosemite Residence Hall with keynote speaker and special assistant to former President Bill Clinton Keith Boykin. Boykin became the highest ranking openly gay member of the Clinton administration. He will kick off the event with topics addressing diversity and social awareness.

"Pride week is to promote awareness," said Mel Commuso, student coordinator of GLBU and English sophomore. "We put it on because it helps to promote the fact that we are here."

Boykin will be followed by several accomplished poets, speakers and a variety of social gatherings such as GLBU night at Tortilla Flats, battle of the sexes softball game and potluck, painting the "P" rainbow, Culture Fest and a resource fair. The closing ceremonies will be held May 22 and will include spoken word artist Ragan Fox, political folk artist Dre and a drag king show by The Disposable Boy Toys.

"I think for a campus that is seen as unaccepting of gay and lesbians there are a lot of allies out there and a lot of support," Andlig said.

As a result, next fall the GLBU will launch an ally program that will allow students to become actively involved

Fraternities fight for cause

By Emily Wong

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Somebody warn the cops.

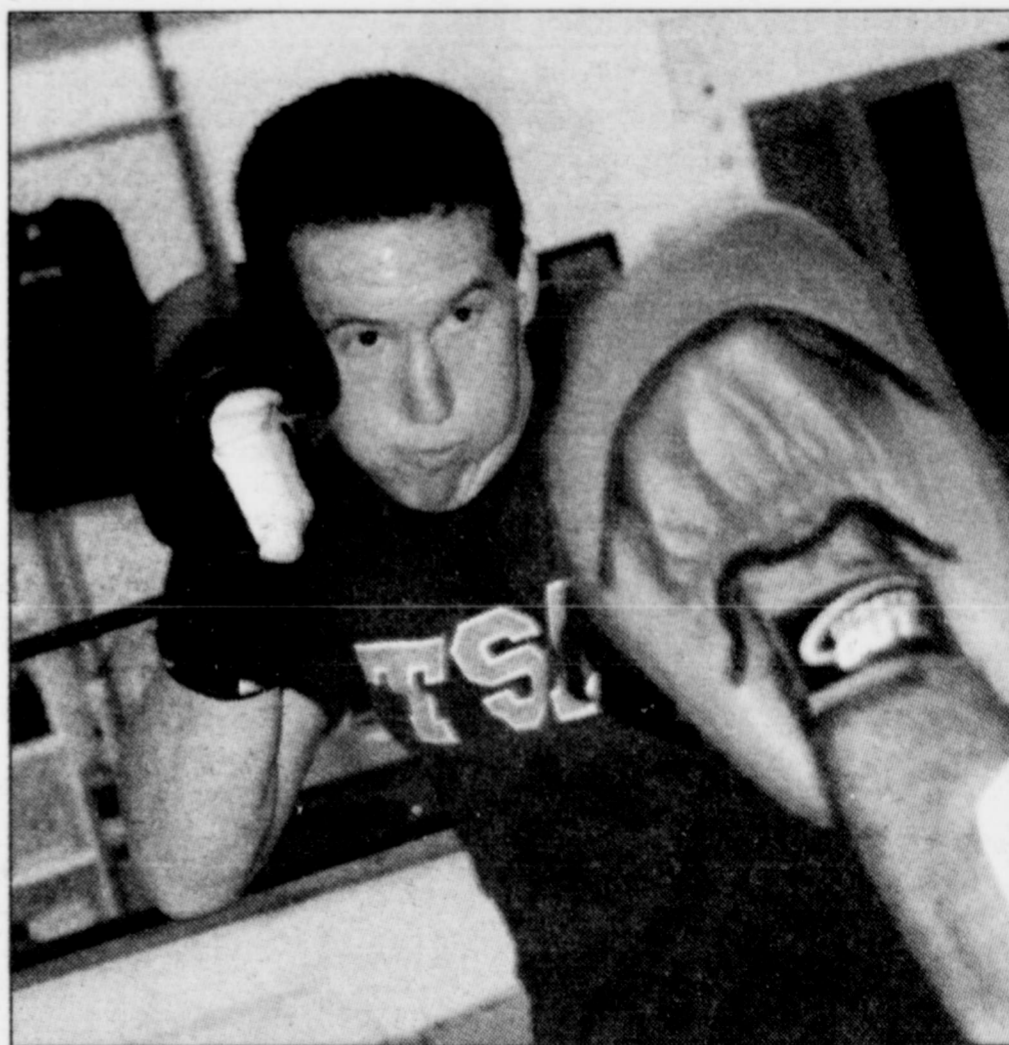

Friday night at 7 p.m. men from 12 different fraternities will instigate the largest fight within the Greek community in Cal Poly history.

This historic event will mark the first Fraternity Fight Night in San Luis Obispo. Hosted by SLO Kickboxing, ticket proceeds will benefit Special Olympics.

"I thought this would be a good idea because frat guys can be very competitive," said Scott Adams, co-owner of SLO Kickboxing and promoter of the event. "UCSB has a fight night similar to the one we are going to put on and theirs has been successful."

Fight Night will be presented like a professional show and will have 10 fights. Each fight will pit two men from different fraternities against each other, matched by skill level, weight and athletic ability. In the corners for each fighter will be a SLO Kickboxing trainer coaching them throughout their match.

Fraternity members involved have been training for the past month to prepare for the event. For many, this is their first time training and fighting in the ring.

"I have required that they come in at least three times a week to get proper conditioning," Adams said. "We donated our services free for them to train."

Free training was one incentive that intrigued fraternity members to join the cause.

"Training here has been awesome. We are getting the best of the best to teach us skills," said Phi Sigma Kappa member and industrial technology senior Jeff Jumpe. "I would definitely like to come back here to train after this is over."

For others, their competitive edge has driven them to train hard and compete.

"It's always been my fantasy to get in the ring and kick someone's ass," said Lambda Chi Alpha member and civil engineering sophomore Ryan Gallagher.

And still, more importantly, all fraternity members have volunteered to participate as part of a community service event.

"We are hoping to donate over $1,000 to Special Olympics," Adams said. "This is the perfect charity for us to represent because we are athletes here and we express ourselves through sports. Special Olympics help the needs of those who have certain disabilities compete."

Phi Sigma Kappa member and business senior Mark Manduca said, "it's neat that we're donating to Special Olympics" because it's the national organization his fraternity supports.

Meathead Movers has also offered their services to move equipment out of the gym to provide seating and standing room.

"This is going to be an intimate setting with seats around the ring and standing room in the back," Adams said.

Tickets for the event will range from $10 to $25, based on a seating chart. Tickets can be purchased at SLO Kickboxing on Foothill Boulevard. For more information, contact SLO Kickboxing at 549-8800.

Crime Round Up

Mustang Daily

May 7: A student in Yosemite Hall was found to be in possession of marijuana for sale. No arrest was made but the investigation continues.

May 8: Four Cal Poly students were arrested in downtown San Luis Obispo for malicious mischief (vandalism). Disciplinary action will be taken through Cal Poly Judicial Affairs.

—There were five alcohol-related arrests or citations issued by the University Police Department between Thursday and Sunday. Four arrests were made for public intoxication and one subject was cited for being a minor in possession of alcohol. None of the incidents involved Cal Poly students. Those Cuesta kids are nothing but trouble.

May 9: A construction worker jumped on the hoods of several vehicles near the construction site on Poly Canyon Road. The man was allegedly upset after he was fired. Police filled out a report but did not make an arrest.

—A motorcycle helmet was stolen from a vehicle in the A-1 parking lot.

—The San Luis Obispo County Narcotics Task Force announced the arrest of 25 people involved in a South County based drug ring. SLOCNTF was working with San Luis Obispo County Gang Task Force and several other law enforcement agencies from throughout California. The agencies recovered 1,465 grams of methamphetamine, 4,972 grams of marijuana and 94 grams of cocaine. The drugs had a combined street value of $86,600. In addition to the drugs, law enforcement also seized 35 firearms, drug paraphernalia, a car, a boat and approximately $20,000 in cash when they served search warrants in 31 locations in Arroyo Grande, Grover Beach and Oceano. A few more incidents like this and maybe SLO County can be on "Cops."

May 12: A 27-year-old Grover Beach man was arrested for driving under the influence after he drove into a house at 1353 Higuera St. He lost control of his 1989 Jeep Comanche after he was accelerating on Pepper Street and turned right on Higuera Street. The vehicle collided with two parked cars on the street before jumping the curb and running into the residence's front exterior wall at about 1:10 a.m. A sleeping resident's head was about a foot away of the vehicle's front bumper after impact. There were no injuries in the accident.

—A golf cart was reported stolen from an area near building 10 at 3:46 a.m. The cart was recovered four minutes later between the administration building and the University Union.

—A resident of Yosemite Hall was repeatedly harassed by a series of annoying phone calls. Annoying phone calls. How old are we again?

—A black specialized FSR-modeled bicycle was stolen from the rear of Sequoia Hall. The 27-speed bike was valued at $700. A second bike, a Kona Fire mountain bike valued at $400, was also reported stolen.

May 13: Fence panels fell on a passerby near the horse unit. The subject was taken to Sierra Vista Hospital and treated for wrist and rib injuries.

—A blue Trek bicycle valued at $200 was stolen from the racks near building 10.

Weaker dollar making European vacations, cars more expensive

WASHINGTON — Americans planning for European vacations should be braced to pay more. Ditto for people eyeing European cars. The reason: The dollar's value has hit a four-year low against the euro.

The slide against the euro, and to a lesser extent against other foreign currencies, is likely to continue, analysts say. They believe the Bush administration has made a shift in its attitude toward the greenback.

Including a tumble Monday, triggered by comments Treasury Secretary John Snow made on a Sunday interview program, the dollar is now down by close to 30 percent against the euro, the common currency of 12 European countries. The dollar has declined by a smaller, but still significant, 15 percent against a trade-weighted market basket of currencies.

That means higher prices not only for German cars, French wine and Italian shoes but also Canadian beer, fruit from Mexico and cell phones from South Korea.

Analysts believe the dollar's fall, from admittedly high-flying levels, will continue, given a variety of forces at work. The dollar fell against the yen in late trading in New York Wednesday and was little changed against the euro.

EPA proposes new smog rule, seeks public feedback

WASHINGTON — The

Environmental Protection Agency issued a new proposal Wednesday for cutting ground-level ozone air pollution to meet Clinton-era smog standards.

EPA's proposed rule lays out steps that polluted areas would be required to take to meet the 1997 standards for limiting ozone, a major component of smog, to 0.08 parts per million instead of 0.12 parts per million.

The standards also required the pollution be averaged over an eight-hour period instead of one hour to better reflect actual air quality.

The 368-page proposal outlines a number of possible ways to define whether a community is meeting the standard — and what it should do if it fails to meet the standard.

The EPA is now seeking public feedback over the proposal, and will designate which areas do not meet the standard by April 15, 2004. Three public hearings will be held next month in Dallas, San Francisco and Washington.

SF lawyer says he's dropping suit against Oreo cookies

SAN FRANCISCO — The move to outlaw Oreo cookies in California crumbled Wednesday when the lawyer who tried to ban the tasty snack foods said he had decided to drop his suit.

San Francisco attorney Stephen Joseph told The Associated Press he would not pursue the action any further, and only wanted to get the word out about the dangers of unlabeled fats contained in the popular black and white cookies.

"We have received thousands of emails expressing support for what we have done in advising the public of this problem," Joseph said. "But it's no longer necessary to continue the lawsuit because at the time the lawsuit was filed nobody knew about trans fat. Now everybody knows about trans fat."

He expressed no remorse for using California courts as a publicity tool. Kraft spokesman Michael Mudd, however, saw things differently.

"We really don't believe that the courts are the place to make nutrition policy," Mudd said. "That's best handled by nutrition professionals and regulatory agencies."

Mudd said though the suit was filed May 1 and amended four days later, the company was served with a copy.

Saudi Arabia acknowledges security lapses, says 15 Saudis carried out attacks

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Saudi Arabia acknowledged gaps in security and revealed Wednesday that 15 Saudis carried out the deadly car bomb attacks in Riyadh — a startling admission considering the Arab kingdom took five months to confirm most of the Sept. 11 suicide hijackers were Saudi.

Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal also said this week's attacks, blamed on Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida terror network, were designed to drive away foreigners, but he insisted Saudi Arabia is safer now than before the car bombings.

Still, some foreigners went ahead with plans to leave following Monday night's attacks, which targeted three residential compounds where expatriate executives and professionals live, killing 34 people — including nine attackers — and injuring nearly 200.

"I'm terrified and I'm really scared. I think we need a break from all of this," said Tanya Scott, a 36-year-old Australian flight attendant.

The British School in Riyadh, located in one of the targeted compounds, closed and some teachers left. The U.S. Embassy was closed for security reasons Wednesday and the State Department ordered home nonessential diplomats and family members.

Western hostages, freed from al Qaida-linked group, arrive in Europe from Algeria

COLOGNE, Germany — Planes carrying 17 European hostages freed when Algerian commandos raided the hideout of an Islamic group linked to al-Qaida arrived in Europe on Thursday, homecomings made bitter-sweet by concern for 15 others still held in the Sahara.

Six Germans and one Swede were transported to Cologne on a military plane accompanied by Deputy Foreign Minister Juergen Chrobog, as well as a doctor and psychologist. Minutes later, a plane carrying 10 Austrians also freed in the raid landed in Salzburg.

Some of the hostages leaned heavily on the rail as they got off the plane in Cologne. Axel Mantey, 30, was the first to emerge, sporting a beard and wearing Arab dress. He was followed by his girlfriend Melanie Simon, 25. The Swede, Harald Ickler, 52, punched both arms in the air and gave a double victory sign as he descended the stairs.

All seven — five men and two women — boarded a bus on the tarmac.

3,000 bodies exhumed at central Iraq mass grave; links to 1991 Shiite revolt suspected MAHAWEEL, Iraq — Villagers pulled body after body from a mass grave in central Iraq on Wednesday, exhuming the remains of up to 3,000 people they suspect were killed during the 1991 Shiite revolt against Saddam Hussein's regime.

Uncounted bodies remained unearthed at the site, they said.

By every indication, the mass grave in a village outside Hillah, 60 miles south of Baghdad, is the largest found in Iraq since U.S. forces overthrew Saddam and his Baath Party government last month.

Hundreds of people from nearby towns and villages watched from behind a barbed-wire barrier as sets of remains were pulled from the field and set aside wrapped in plastic bags, sheets and blankets. Some of the bodies' skulls still had tufts of long hair, and officials said they probably were women.

Many of the onlookers were weeping, and some chanted: "There is no God but God, and the Baath (Party) is the enemy of God." Several women were holding pictures of their missing men.

"This says something very sad," Vanasupa said. "We say we are committed to creating an environment of mutual respect, but we don't seem to be able to implement a simple policy that gives body to those words."

Provost Paul Zingg said the executive committee appreciates the concerns that Vanasupa's resolution addresses, but the resolution itself was not the best way to achieve a civil and respectful workplace.

"I think the resolution had a lot of problems in its wording and vagueness," Zingg said. "I think it's a proposed solution that would have only caused more problems."

Vanasupa said the reason that the resolution was voted down probably had more to do with personal opinions than textual technicalities.

"I think the fact that the vote occurred by secret ballot is very telling," Vanasupa said. "It's not the role of the executive committee to act as a filtering agent for resolutions. However, the meetings took the form of hostile, vehement debate; no one offered suggestions on how to improve the resolution for the agenda."

Menon said a potential loss to academic freedom might have prompted executive committee members to vote against agendizing the resolution.

"A key issue may be that we cannot impose prior restraint on academic freedom to explore matters which are legally permitted and within the first amendment rights of all citizens," Menon said. "The sense of the body is that the new preface added to (Cal Poly's) Responsible Use Policy signed by the provost provides clear warning on what you may do in accordance with your rights. That warning is seen as being sufficient."

On April 18, a direct message from Zingg was added as a new preface to Cal Poly's RUP. The preface recognizes that personal viewing of sexually explicit materials on campus computers may result in a breach of ethical standards and create a hostile or perceived hostile workplace. It further states that the university does not condone or tolerate these actions.

Zingg is assembling a task force to meet next fall that would address some of the concerns that Vanasupa's resolution focused on.

"I'd be happy to participate in a task force that took real action," Vanasupa said. "I don't think (the issue) is dead. Perhaps there will be another resolution next year."

Vanasupa said although she is disappointed with the executive committee's decision, she is emotionally drained and ready to move on.

"What I have learned is that we all need to fight the tendency for selfishness and apathy that is within us in order to create a society where we are all treated with dignity," Vanasupa said. "I can certainly look back and see where I have failed to speak out on the behalf of others and I hope not to act so apathetically the next time I have a chance."

Vanasupa has been campaigning since February to amend the current RUP that allows access to pornographic Web sites from university computers.

Students visualize dialogue

By Caitlin O'Farrell
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

The impact of words and memories will be transformed into art for a student display today.

Three Cal Poly art and design seniors will showcase their work in a repeat performance tonight at 7 in the Pacific Marine Building.

"The show and the art are very non-traditional and contemporary, they portray deep concepts that are not usually addressed in everyday life," said Keith Dormunth, one of the featured artists.

Joe Dominguez, Erik Marinovich and Dormunth put together the art show, which is entitled "Dialogue Becomes Visual," as a senior project, but it turned into something larger than they ever expected. They were asked by the faculty to repeat the show because it was such a huge success.

This is the result of a year's worth of hard work and brainstorming. The three students sent postcards to more than a 1,000 people and did all the promotional posters on their own. Three hundred people came to the first show on May 10 and they were lining up to see the pieces on display.

"The most rewarding thing is that we affected and inspired people to be creative. I heard about a guy who came to the show and then went home and drew until 4 in the morning," Dominguez said. "In the art world it isn't about the money or the notoriety; it is about affecting people."

Since the show has gained so much popularity here in San Luis Obispo, the group is thinking about continuing the show in Northern California if they can find a new location that suits them. The original building had a lot to do with the success of the show and it fit the theme that the students had in mind.

"The spot we chose fit us to a T, we even lived in the space for a while," Dominguez said.

The idea came about last year after classes ended. Dominguez, Marinovich and Dormunth began talking about what was next for them and they decided that they wanted to do something really creative.

"We came up with this powerful statement 'Dialogue Becomes Visual' which is pretty relevant to our society today," Dominguez said. "In our culture, everything is visual; people just don't read anymore."

Dominguez has displayed photos that portray the theme 'unexposed consciousness of time.' There are six photos that are 30x40, printed using regular techniques with no digital retouching.

"They (the photos) speak of memory and of the past," Dominguez said. "The theme is based on the concept that there is no segregation of the past and the present. Everything is passing us as the moment goes on."

Marinovich constructed an installation consisting of 60 frames he collected from thrift stores from San Francisco to Los Angeles. He built the frames into an 11-foot wall and filled them with drawings comprised in graphite. At one point a live bird was contained in the structure.

Dormunth created a series of 16 paintings and drawings composed with graphite, colored pencils and acrylic paint. They illustrate a theme of past consciousness of the human being.

The group rented out an old building on the corner of Archer and Pacific. The Pacific Marine building is located at 331 Pacific, but the entrance is on Archer.

"We will be around to answer questions and talk about the works with anyone that is interested in a discussion," Marinovich said.

Top 10: On-campus nooky

I've always been a rebel. As a child, I was bad to the bone: I scoffed at time-outs and pulled cats' tails. My on-the-edge status has only intensified with age: In high school, I wrote in textbooks and wore pink Adidas to the prom. Now I eat Pez straight out of the wrapper!

Yes, "danger" is my middle name; I've always loved the thrill of the forbidden. And in college, I obviously like to push the edge of the sexual envelope. For four years, I've gone to class and endured lectures not even realizing the randy potential the university grounds possess. With a mish-mash of complex buildings, secluded structures and sprawling fields, Cal Poly begs to be corrupted.

Today, as my final act of rebellion, I will share with you the Top 10 places to hook up on campus:

10. The 50 yard-line of Mustang Stadium: If you're going to go deep on the field, beware of groundskeepers and sprinklers. Judging by the lackluster football seasons we've had, sex on the goal line may be the biggest score of the year!

9. Poly Canyon: With its endless hills and surreal architecture designs, you'll feel wonderfully isolated. A night time walk along the creek or afternoon picnic may turn lusty, but not Thursday afternoons; you may be unpleasantly surprised by swarthy ROTC cadets practicing ambushes!

8. The elevators in the parking structure: "Going down?" Kidnap him on campus and really push his buttons. I guarantee the big glass lift won't be the only thing on the rise!

7. The P: After a warm summer night with a bottle of wine, you might be tempted to rename it "The Big O!" Just don't schedule a rendezvous when the Greeks are pledging, or it could be Phi Alpha Awful.

6. Building 38 (math and science): People clear out early and the doors stay unlocked. Perhaps it's time you and your girl show them what one plus one really makes!

5. The Police Escort Van: Numerous rows of bench seats make this the perfect after-library romp! Just wait for the delicious guy driving to drop everyone off and yank him in the back. It'll give new meaning to the phrase "getting a ride!"

4. Fisher Science: What's hotter than a blue flame? A red-hot quickie in the biggest lecture hall. Or discover her wild side amidst the natural history of the mini-museum!

3. The horticulture unit: One of my all-time fantasies. Drive past the greenhouse to discover sprawling gardens and fragrant walkways of the Leaning Tree Arboretum. Have "around-the-world sex" in the Australian, South American and Mediterranean-themed gardens. Or play a naughty game of "Alice In Wonderland" in the playing card-shaped hedge maze.

2. Fifth floor of the library: If you're in need of a study break, a little groping between the shelves is a delightful thrill. Beware of nosy librarians and the amplifying acoustics, so pick a table facing a window and tell your hottie to browse YOUR rack!

And the all-time best place to hook up on campus is:

1. Crandall Pool: At night, this mild-mannered swimming pool becomes a pulsating blue sex palace. The shimmering turquoise reflection and splashy echoes have a seductive, "Cruel Intentions" quality! But you'd better cozy up to a Rec Center honcho, because they're the only one with keys. For open-air water-play, Mott Pool is a good bet. "But watch out for the motion sensors" cautions soccer-stud Brian, adding, "Not that I would know!"

Such daring sexcapades aren't for everyone! But for rebels like myself who sneer at the law, ("felony shmemony!") an on-campus quickie makes me feel like my tuition was worth it!

White-only prom a backward step for equality

Equality. By definition, it is the state or an instance of being equal in number, amount, rank or meaning. More importantly, though, equality is seeing all human beings as people and not colors or genders, and certainly none held in less regard than the others. Equality means a man who is African-American is a man, and not a black man.

Equality is what Martin Luther King Jr. fought for, and why we are so grateful for that fight we hold a day each year in his honor.

With all the progress made in moving toward equality in the last 50 years, it's shocking that segregation and racism are still not only alive in America, but violently kicking. Alive in the occasional cross burned on an innocent person's lawn, alive in comedians playing on racial stereotypes for a laugh and most recently alive in the whites-only prom held at Taylor County High School in Albany, Ga., Friday.

Last year, the juniors who made up the prom committee held the school's first integrated prom in 31 years in the rural Georgia town. Previously, parents and students organized separate proms for blacks and whites after school officials stopped sponsoring school dances, partly to stop problems stemming from interracial dating, according to CNN.

This year, a small group of white juniors decided they wanted a separate whites-only prom in addition to the integrated dance.

CNN reported that the decision to hold the whites-only prom was not unanimous.

"They didn't vote or anything. They said, 'This is what we're going to do,'" said senior Gerica McCrary, a black student who helped organize last year's dance.

"I think a lot of seniors were disappointed," said Erin Posey, a white senior. "Now we have to choose between two groups of friends."

Just a year after taking a giant leap toward a more equal school environment, it's hard to comprehend why the students would want to regress. Furthermore, why would an administration consisting of supposedly educated adults have allowed – in fact, supported – such segregation in the school system?

It may be argued that the blacks have the integrated prom to attend, so it's the whites' right to have their own prom if they choose. It's not as though the blacks are being excluded from prom.

However, separate but equal is a fallacy. To begin with, the whites have two proms to go to, the blacks have just one. Secondly, the idea of one's skin color causing outing from any school function is blatant race discrimination reminiscent of the 1950s.

School officials have claimed in the past that interracial dating is the cause of the segregated proms.

But is interracial dating such a threat, anyway? In a 1998 study, black/white interracial marriages accounted for about 6 percent of U.S. marriages, according to www.racerelations.about.com.

Just a year after taking a giant leap toward a more equal school environment, it's hard to comprehend why the students would want to regress.

Additionally, the Web site reported that for years psychologists have discussed the significance of interracial relationships as a factor in improving race relations in society.

Finally, where does the line stop? Next year, will Hispanics have their own prom? How about half-black and half-white students? Everyone in America, with the exception of pure-blooded Native Americans, has a heritage originating in another country.

With 439 students at Taylor County High School and 232 of them black, amicable race relations are definitely something the school should look in to. Having a campus divided in two doesn't say much for school pride or unity.

A school would never allow for segregated baseball teams or math classes, and segregated school dances are just as preposterous.

It's time the Taylor County School Board took off their horn-rimmed glasses long enough to notice what year they were in and make some policy changes.

Issue is up for debate

Editor,

This is a response to David Coyle's May 8 letter ("Free Speech Should Be Intelligent"). I desire to have an open debate with you. I can use this paper as an open forum, but I think that would be inconsiderate because it would take away space in Mustang Daily from others to write what is on their minds about any issue. Whether you prefer just you and I chatting or having our debate witnessed by many people, you can contact me. I thank you for coming forward and challenging me on my points that you agree or disagree with. I look forward to hearing from you.

$500 election claim doesn't make sense

Editor,

Over the past several weeks, Mustang Daily has, on numerous occasions, stated that Alison Anderson and Olga Berdial are running their campaign on $500 – this is clearly not true.

Let's look at the facts. Any conservative estimate would put the price tag of their campaign at more than $1,500. Their 250 T-shirts alone at a cost of $5 per shirt brings the price to $1250 – already $750 more than they claim to have spent. These T-shirts, along with their glossy campaign cards, posters, stake signs and Orter Pops that they have given out in the dorms easily brings the cost of their campaign to $1,500, if not more. These figures are much closer to the budgets of the Parnell/Paasch and Ayers/Vazquez campaigns than the Daily has reported. Cal Poly students have clearly been misled.

Yet students seem to believe what they read in this paper and are casting their votes on the basis of false information. I have spoken with numerous students who told me that they cast their votes for Alison and Olga because of their "supposed" $500 budget. These students have clearly been misled by both Alison and Olga and by the Mustang Daily.

I encourage the Mustang Daily to do its research and use a bit more common sense before reporting facts that are clearly false and that could influence the outcome of this election. Cal Poly students deserve better, both from the candidates and from this paper.

'Nametag dissertation' proven wrong

Hello, my name is Laura. That's what my nametag says. I wore it all day last Wednesday because some guy said it would make people act friendlier toward me.

That guy is Scott Ginsberg of St. Louis, who wore an adhesive nametag with "Scott" scratched across it for 900 days straight. Scott called it "The Name Tag Dissertation" and swore that by wearing his moniker on his T-shirt, people around him became more open and social.

It all began when Scott attended a seminar and then, on a whim, decided to keep his nametag on after the lecture ended. He said he met 20 new people that night, who all approached him to strike up conversations.

Nine hundred days and countless boxes of nametags later, Scott has published a book, created a Web site and is considering a career as a motivational speaker. All of this credited to wearing a crumpled, white sticker with his name on it.

Scott's success motivated me. If he could befriend the masses by wearing a nametag, why couldn't I? So, with "Hello, my name is LAURA" boldly scrawled on a sticky label and fastened to my sweater, I embarked on my day at Cal Poly anxious to meet heaps of new friends.

Yet no one was approaching me to say, "Hello LAURA, splendid day isn't it?" or "My LAURA, what a stunning coiffure; who does your highlights?"

In fact, rather than people approaching me at all, I began to detect uncomfortable glances and pity stares from passerbys. I realized that everyone assumed I had made an embarrassing faux pas by forgetting to remove my nametag after whatever event I had just attended. It was as if I had accidentally left the size sticker on the back of my new jeans so that everyone could see the strip of "size twos" stuck to the back of my thigh (OK, maybe not size two, but the metaphor still works).

My nametag dissertation was not going as well as Scott's.

Finally, a girl in my biology lab asked, "Uh, Laura, did you forget to take your nametag off?"

At last, someone approached me! "Why no, I didn't forget to take my nametag off," I chortled. "I am wearing it on purpose!"

Surprisingly, this didn't lead to further witty banter or any lunch invitations. My nametag experiment was a failure. I didn't make a single new friend. Scott was wrong.

Although an admirable idea, Scott's nametag crusade isn't breaking any barriers on the Cal Poly campus. Maybe wearing a nametag for 900 days gets you places in Missouri, but it only gets you funny looks in California.

Still, if you think that Scott's onto something with his nametag wearing campaign, I encourage you to grab a Sharpie and wear your tag with pride. Maybe you'll have better luck than me.

If I see you, I'll say hello.

Donating eggs not solution for money problems

This weekend, for the second time in my life, my wallet was full enough to make closing it a challenge. And since the first time it was merely full of $1 bills after waiting tables in my dad's restaurant at age 15, this second instance of inability to match up my Velcro closures should have made me at least a little excited. This time around, however, finding a healthy stack of ones in lieu of the 26 Wells Fargo withdrawal receipts I encountered would have been truly boat floating.

Realizing my wallet's unexpected thickness would soon resemble debt, I was forced to recall a conversation I had with my friend Kevin a few weeks back. It was then that, after listening to me rant about my two jobs not "being enough," Kevin suggested the unsuggestable: "You could always sell an egg."

Selling human eggs has become an increasingly acceptable practice these days, and the controversy that has taken root is watered by a number of different beliefs. Arguments primarily center around the morality of the issue, but some people are more concerned with the psychological taxes that would accompany a human egg donation.

A CNN Health report on www.bioethics.umm.edu morally compares the selling of eggs to the selling of organs, which is illegal. Jeffrey P. Kahn, Ph.D., director of bioethics at the University of Minnesota also said in the report that with procedures involving eggs, "costs are borne almost entirely by the patient - creating a market for services rather than a system by which to allocate a scarce resource."

A large problem is encountered when you add to this the fact that specific women are being targeted as a resource for eggs, according to www.christiancourier.com. The site notes in an article titled "Eggs for Sale" that even in 1999 a man was rumored to have started a Web site offering fashion model eggs for auction. With patients paying out-of-pocket for all egg expenses, wealthy families could be popping out some pretty hot babes while those with a smaller income would give birth to lil' ones destined to have "great personalities."

Cursing an unfortunate family with untamable hair, my big butt or my lack of math skills never crossed my mind when Kevin and I were planning my path of debt-avoidance, though. The main thought that crossed my mind was whether I could function normally knowing that my biological son or daughter would be plaguing some schoolyard with bad puns. Or asking myself if the blockheaded baby behind me at Vons looked a little too familiar. Or speculating, in the far future, if the Starbucks boy who miraculously knew my order before I placed it had a hairline that only coincidentally resembled my grandfather's. Thus, Kevin and I concluded that while plucking my eggs would pay, it would also throw my already-spastic-self into quite a state of paranoia.

But for those interested women out there who could stand watching the Welch's grape juice commercials without wondering, I strongly encourage getting those eggs to market. And while I'm not an advocate for auctioning eggs and giving some couples an unfair advantage, I think that accepting a commission for helping another family is not a dishonorable way to up one's cash flow.

Besides, guys do it all the time, but that's another piece.

Letters to the editor

Too late for racial retribution

Editor,

After reading the chain of letters about restitution for minorities, I'd like to say this: Restitution at this point is pointless.

Tylor Middlestadt is right. Restitution isn't about handouts; it's compensation for past wrong doings. However, Matthew Raybuck is right too. He shouldn't have to give restitution. It's unethical to blame someone else for the wrongdoings another commits. If you hit me, I'm not going to blame your brother or your mom or any other relative of yours: I'm going to blame you.

And to give restitution to one group of people is a tricky thing: To give it to one group means you'd have to give it to everyone who has been wronged, which is pretty much impossible. Also, it's hard to choose what is the correct amount to be given out. Should some arbitrary amount of money be given to African Americans, or should we give them the mule and the 40 acres? (If you think this, feel free to give them your house.)

And as for Jarad: A generation is a long time, roughly 30 years. And when you look at the span of many generations, you'd have to realize that people change; old people leave and young people take their place. Ideas change in the blink of an eye; some people change with that blink. The best time for restitution is soon after the wrongdoing is committed. Otherwise, it's pointless.

A more sensible thing to do would just be to minimize the occurrences of these injustices in the future. It's what happens in a real apology.

Nam Nguyen is a computer science freshman.

Being white won't get you everything

Editor,

This is a response to Tylor Middlestadt's letter about white privilege ("Being white almost always an advantage," May 7). While it is true that being white brings about many privileges like you stated, you went too far in your assumptions. Was it necessary to attack the author's family background (which you don't know) just because he/she is white? Being white is not equivocal to having health care privileges and parents who pay for college — that has more to do with personal wealth and middle or upper class status in society. Please don't assume if you are white that you have economic privileges, because that's isolating the millions of poor whites in our country.

While white privilege can help a person land a job, get a house or get a lighter jail sentence, it does not mean that the same person will enjoy good dental care, get a paid-for gas card or caring parents.

Lilian Andrade is an international business senior currently in Thailand.

Editor,

I usually always read the letters to the editor to get some sort of a grin about some stupid issue people are fighting about. Never in my five years here have I felt compelled to respond until I read Tylor Middlestadt's lovely piece on how easy it is to be white ("Being white almost always an advantage," May 7). I am sure he had a point in the beginning; it is an "ignorant assumption that minorities are lazy and expect handouts."

You should have quit while you were ahead, Mr. Middlestadt. Instead you go on to make your own ignorant assumptions about being white. Tylor assumes all white families make six-figure incomes and can afford to buy their children cars and pay for their college. If my parents could afford it, maybe they would ... as would yours. Instead, I bought my own vehicle with my own money and I even buy my own gas! Imagine that!

As far as college tuition goes, I think that if I were not white I may have been able to get a scholarship or grant. Instead, I will be $20,000 in debt after I leave this wonderful institution. Next time you accuse someone of making ignorant assumptions, I hope you have the decency not to make ignorant assumptions of your own.

Scott Kloplic is a construction management senior.

Riding a bike would solve traffic problems

Editor,

I am responding to Joe Camajani's letter "Campus police needed on Highland" (May 7). It seems to me that Joe is complaining about something that is easily fixable. Joe, if you would just leave your house five minutes earlier you would cruise into campus no problem and miss the backup of cars. Quit your bitchin' Joe. You are probably one of those people who live near campus and won't sit your lazy ass on your bike and ride to school.

Why? Because you won't wake up 15 minutes earlier to do so. It's OK though, all us lazy people need our full 12 hours of sleep. Oh, and what about those brave people who do stand out on Highland every morning directing traffic so crazy drivers like you don't kill anybody? Forgot about them, huh? Be thankful that they are out there helping you get to class 20 minutes late and not 40. Quit your bitchin' Joe. There is a theme to this response and I hope after people read it: I will see the next "Quit Yer Bitchin'" article in the Mustang Daily written about people like you, Joe.

Jason Shaw is an electrical engineering senior who despises lazy people that like to complain (and who are civil "I like to play in the dirt" engineers).

Letter writer was racist, too

Editor,

Tylor Middlestadt ("Being white almost always an advantage," May 7) said it perfect when he wrote, "Racism is present in every-day American life." For example, I was reading a letter to the editor the other day when I came across the following line: "You have absolutely no right to say what those who are blessed with a more beautiful skin color deserve." Thank you Tylor, for proving once again that people like you are unable to form an intelligent argument without displaying their own imbedded racism. Here's some news for you, "buddy." I am white ... I have never had full dental or health insurance, my parents do not pay my tuition or my gas card. I did have everything that I needed when I grew up (love, food, clothes) and it was probably easier for my parents, but only because they had the intelligence to stop after having as many children as they could support. And finally, the last time I checked, minimum wage in California is $6.75 an hour. Now, this letter is not about slavery or civil rights, it is not about the negative stereotypes of minorities or the ignorance of a letter written on April 22. It is about your ignorance, your gross exaggerations and the fact that YOU are certainly not someone who should be voicing an argument for restitution.

Just a thought.

Daniel Iverson is an aerospace engineering junior who would rather hear from someone who knows what oppression really is.

Building Careers

You may already have been in a building we designed. Maybe it was your high school or the hospital where you were born. People use our buildings for different things: learning, healing, living, parking, working and playing. What links them together is our belief that inspired architecture brings vigor and quality to people and their communities. If you were part of our firm, you'd know that we ask a lot of questions, listen intently and care deeply about the work. You'd see that we believe in design that neither mimics history nor embraces ubiquitous culture; we hew toward work that is rooted in the present and we try to anticipate the potential futures of a building - and the people it will serve - over time. Potty Poetry

Magic markers new accessory for night on the town

By Meghan Nowakowski
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

In high school it was something girls dreaded. Seeing your name written on the bathroom wall meant one thing: Someone, somewhere did not like you.

I can still remember running out to the lunch table to inform certain friends of their unfortunate bathroom wall luck.

"The bathroom totally says that you're a bitch, Christie," I said.

"Oh my God, it was totally Caitlin, she's been hella dogging me all day," she said back.

Quickly we would run back to scratch it out, hoping no one saw it and reputations would not be harmed.

My, how times have changed. Or have they?

Been to the bathrooms at Bull's Tavern or Frog and Peach lately? These walls have become canvases for the artwork of the highly intoxicated.

Dating a new guy and not too sure about his past? Be sure to check out the "ass-holes not to date list" at Frog and Peach.

Karl Wighter, a bartender and bouncer at Frog and Peach, said he has seen some pretty interesting things transpire due to writing on the walls.

"One girl was writing her ex's name on the list, and his new chick was standing right behind her," Wighter said. "It kind of got ugly."

Though Wighter said the writing does not bother him, he did say if he caught someone doing it he would say something.

"That is adolescent and inappropriate," Wighter said. "It's the same as someone peeing in the sink."

Bathroom wall writing only seems to happen in excess at Bull's and Frog and Peach. Other, less wild bars do not have as much of a problem, though the workers at Bull's do not view the graffiti as a burden.

"I think it adds a certain flavor to this place," Bull's bartender Tony Henny said. "If we have a pen, we will actually give it to them."

Bull's bathrooms have become notorious for giving props to yourself and those you love. "Marsh Street girls," "Henderson" and "Gamma Phi Beta" are written several times among the random names.

Just when you thought you have seen it all, you find that oh-so sincere poem or words of wisdom.

"Here's to you, here's to me, friends forever is what we'll be, and if we ever disagree, f*ck you, here's to me."

Then there is my personal favorite.

"No matter how hot, no matter how sexy, some guy, somewhere is tired of her shit."

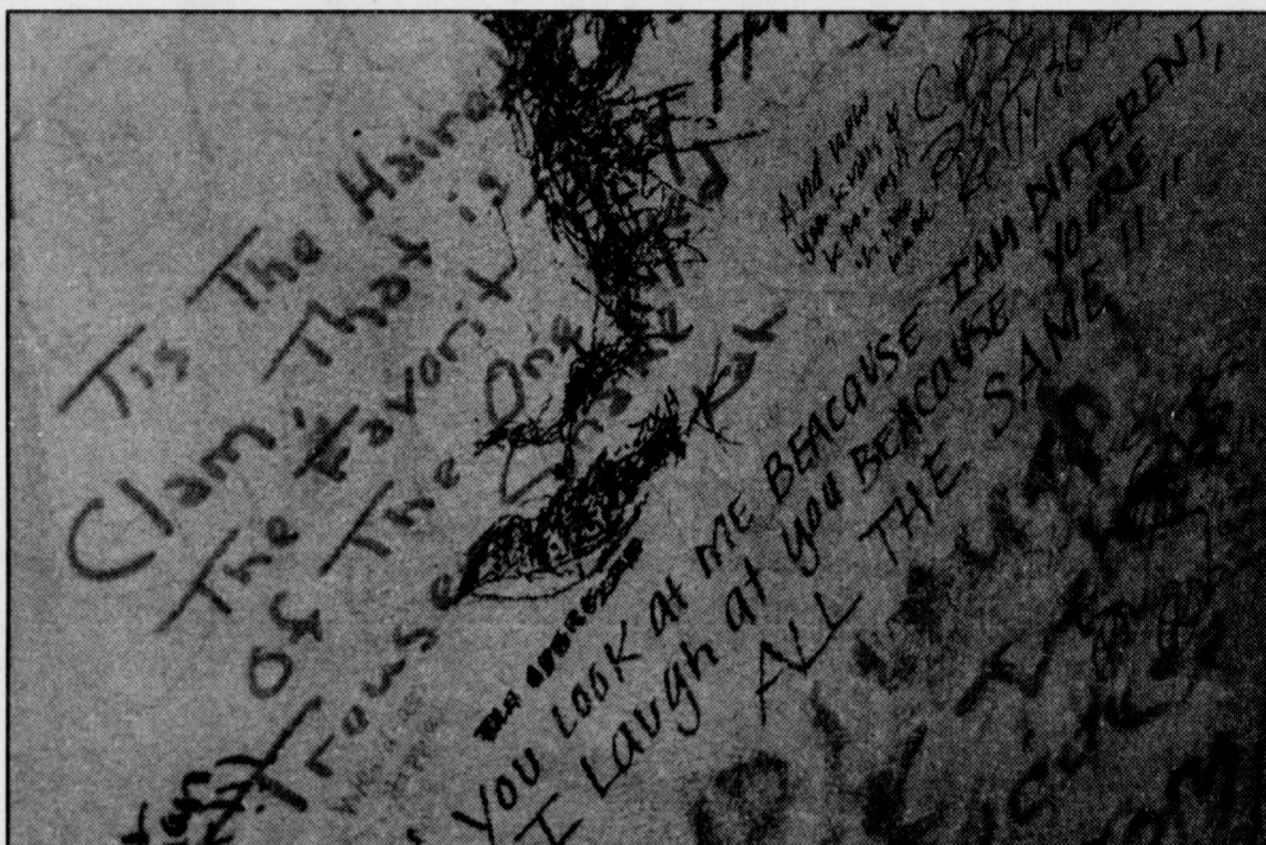

After taking a look at each bar bathroom, I decided I wanted to see someone in tagging action. I knew this would be easy, since one of the names written repeatedly on the Bull's walls happens to be a friend of mine.

For the sake of not embarrassing this liberal studies senior, I will be referring to her as "L. Dub."

If it is a Bull's night, L. Dub rarely leaves her Sharpie at home.

"I just love it. For some reason when I am here, I feel like I want to contribute to what has already been done."

'L. Dub'

LESLIE BURTON/MUSTANG DAILY

At Frog & Peach Pub, shown above, a range of random ramblings to poignant poetry line the bathroom walls. At this venue, however, most of the writing is confined to the women's facilities.

"I just love it," she said. "For some reason when I am here, I feel like I want to contribute to what has already been done."

So one Thursday night, we set off to Bull's. Four beers later she was in full effect.

I kept a look out, hoping that I would not be caught.

"Kind of gives you a rush, doesn't it?" she said.

I started to agree with her until a small group of girls rounded the corner. I bolted as fast as I could, not wanting to be associated with this crazy girl.

Minutes later, Dub was still not out of the bathroom area. I cautiously went back to look for her, only to find all four of them sharing her Sharpie.

"Let's write our sorority letters," one girl said excitedly.

"I want to write that the girl my boyfriend hooked up with is a whore," another said.

"Nope," L. Dub quickly interrupted. "In college we can only write nice things."

Maybe things have changed a little more than I thought.

Voyeuristic rebellion centerpiece of new photography exhibit

By Caitlin O'Farrell
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Raw, real images. That's what Joseph Hsu was aiming for with his senior project.

Hsu will host an opening and reception for his photography show "Betelnut Beauty — A Voyeuristic Visual Diary" tonight from 5 to 8. The exhibit will take place at Robert E. Kennedy Library in the photo gallery, through May 25.

"This is a chance for people to come out and see something entirely different from their own culture," photography professor Eric Johnson said. "(Hsu) captures the phenomenon of this culture with a snapshot authenticity in his own very unique way."

The photographs are a series of candid shots taken of young Taiwanese women dressed in erotic costumes selling betelnut fruits in transparent booths on street corners. The betelnut, similar to chewing tobacco, is a fruit that grows from the betel palm of South Asia. People buy it to give themselves a good feeling inside, Hsu said.

"I chose the university gallery so I could run the show longer and reach as many people as possible," Hsu said. "I definitely want to affect the people in our generation more than anything else."

The shots Hsu took are going to contrast with ads from magazines where the subject matter is very similar — sexy women trying to sell a product. Only these Taiwanese women are using themselves in everyday life to sell their product, right out there on the streets. They are a walking advertisement and a sex symbol.

"This project is my rebellion to our voyeuristic visual culture," Hsu said in an interview with CMYK magazine. "The images in this project are candid, and when watching them, viewers feel disturbed by the rough but real quality. These 'beauties' are almost identical to models in erotic ads, but I reveal the totally opposite view of similar subjects."

The photographs were shot during a two-week road trip around Taiwan. The images were taken while Hsu was buying betelnuts to simulate the buyer/voyeur perspective, according to his press release.

"The pictures are almost sort of disturbing because the focus, contrast and composition are all very rough," Hsu said. "You can't really enjoy the women in the image, but that is the point, because I am taking the opposite approach of the advertisement."

Some of the women Hsu photographed were as young as 16 years old. By selling this fruit and earning commission, these girls can earn a lot more money than they would by getting a job that pays minimum wage.

"I chose pictures that really spoke to me and that relate to my thinking on the matter," Hsu said. "The key is to contrast the erotic advertisement with my own striking image."

Hsu is an art and design super-senior concentrating in photography. He will be available at the reception for questions and comments, and refreshments will also be served.

"When he (Hsu) gets an idea, he goes after it with all he's got and finishes it," Johnson said. "This should make for an incredibly interesting and unique show."

Homeless band uses music to breed awareness

By Andy Fahey

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Instead of sitting around waiting for something to improve their situation, a group of homeless people from San Luis Obispo is taking strides to improve the homeless situation through music.

"The state, the federal government, they're spending billions of dollars and the homeless problem is getting worse," said Franklin Lawson, a homeless man who lives in his truck. "I don't know where all the money is going, but it's not really working."

Lawson is the lead guitar player in The Homeless Band, a San Luis Obispo-based group whose members are all homeless, except for guitar player and vocalist Dan Grant.

Grant is the mastermind behind the band. He came up with the idea after seeing people like Lawson play on the street for tips.

"I've played music and written music and I thought, 'Well, maybe I could put together a homeless band and in the process do something good for the community, myself and the musicians,'" Grant said. "They never really get much attention, yet they're pretty good."

A real estate broker and avocado farmer, Grant initially wanted to make a difference in the lives of the band members, but in the process of putting together The Homeless Band's first single, "We Look Just The Same," it evolved into something bigger. The band now anticipates a series of benefit concerts for the homeless, a cause that will attract big-name artists and result in something similar to a "Woodstock for the homeless," Lawson said.

"I really foresee a groundswell movement of homeless people trying to help themselves," he said.

The band would like to take their show on the road to venues throughout California and possibly beyond and work with different homeless organizations. Although it has a core group, the band would pick up different people along the way so that everyone could have a chance to play, Grant said.

But the band will not take on anyone who isn't homeless. If it did, something in the message of the music would be lost, Grant said.

"We're staying where we started on this," he said. "If we started to get a bunch of people in, it wouldn't have the same feel. This is a homeless band with homeless musicians for the benefit of homeless people."

In addition to helping homeless people economically, the band also serves to show that the homeless are not worthless people.

Music will serve as an eye-opener to show that they do have value and that they don't want to be outcasts, Lawson said.

"Music is the way to do it," he said. "Music is a powerhouse force in our culture."

Although Lawson now has a vision for the band, he wasn't sold on the idea when Grant first approached him with it.

"I thought he was a total kook," Lawson said.

But Lawson finally came around on The Homeless Band when he saw that Grant was just trying to help people.

"He's for real," Lawson said of Grant. "He doesn't have any underlying motives."

The band plays what Lawson calls "retro-folk-country-message music" and is by no means a polished product.

"We don't have time to polish it," Grant said. "It's not like we're jamming in the rehearsal studio for hours upon hours."

In fact, the band never rehearsed the song together until the day of the recording. Lawson found the band's drummer the day before they went to the studio and the piano player was there just long enough to make the song before moving on.

"We Look Just the Same" might be a little rough around the edges, but the song's clarity takes a back seat to its authenticity, Grant said.

"Nobody was really a polished musician, yet there was a feel when you see it that comes across that you make no mistake that there's a lot of heart and soul in it," he said.

The band has so far been well received, Grant said. They played at last month's Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week and the crowd really seemed to pick up on the honest message of the song.

COURTESY PHOTO

Conceived after real estate broker Dan Grant saw homeless people playing music for tips on the street, The Homeless Band seeks to capture the experience of people who are 'just the same' as everyone else.

"The song came basically from the heart," said Grant, who wrote the song after conducting several interviews with homeless people, who were both band and non-band members, at the Prado Day Center. "In doing that, it has a dimension that a lot of music doesn't have."

So far The Homeless Band has just made the one recording, but a longer CD about homeless life is in the works. When the CD is completed it will be available for sale with all the proceeds benefiting homeless agencies.

"If we believe this is gonna work, it's gonna work," Lawson said. "Just the few little shows we've done have shown us it's gonna work."

Music is the way to do it. Music is a powerhouse force in our culture.

Belgian lawyer files war crimes complaint against U.S. official

By Paul Ames
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

BRUSSELS, Belgium — A left-wing candidate in Belgium's parliamentary elections lodged a war crimes complaint Wednesday against U.S. Gen. Tommy Franks, the commander of American forces in Iraq.

Lawyer Jan Fermon presented the complaint against Franks and a Marine officer he identified as Col. Brian P. McCoy to Belgium's federal prosecutors' office despite recent changes in the country's war crimes law to prevent such charges against Americans.

Fermon said he was representing 17 Iraqi and two Jordanian civilians injured or bereaved by U.S. attacks, though he gave few details.

"This is not a symbolic action; my clients want an independent inquiry into what happened," Fermon told reporters as he arrived at the prosecutors' office. Fermon is running in Sunday's elections for the small, far-left Resist group.

Fermon said the accusations against Franks focused on the bombing of civilian areas, indiscriminate shooting by U.S. troops when they entered Baghdad and the failure to stop looting. He charged McCoy with ordering troops to fire on ambulances.

The case has provoked anger from

"This is not a symbolic action; my clients want an independent inquiry into what happened."

Jan Fermon
Lawyer

Washington. America's most senior military officer suggested the complaint and earlier charges against other U.S. officials could jeopardize Belgium's role as a host for NATO and European Union meetings.

"It's looked upon by the U.S. government as a very, very serious situation," Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Tuesday on a visit to NATO headquarters in Brussels. "It ... clearly could have a huge impact on where we gather."

To head off such complaints, the government last month rushed through changes to the laws, which were introduced in the early 1990s to authorize Belgian courts to try genocide and other war crimes wherever they occurred.

Legal experts said the case against Franks and McCoy would be a first test for the revised law, and predicted it would be thrown out by the prosecutors' office.

"This could be just a spectacular way of catching attention in the media," said Prof. Jan Wouters, director of the Institute for International Law at the University of Leuven.

The war crimes laws were first used to target suspects in Rwanda's 1994 genocide who fled to Belgium, the former colonial ruler of the central African nation.

Since then, complaints have been brought against a string of world leaders including Fidel Castro, Yasser Arafat and Saddam Hussein, although none has gone to trial.

The Belgian parliament revised the law last month after complaints were filed against Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, former President Bush and U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell.

Under the new amendments, Belgian courts should refer foreigners facing war crimes charges to their own countries if they are democracies with a record of fairness in justice.

Foreign Minister Louis Michel called Fermon's case "an abuse of the (Belgian) law." He said while the government can now refer the case to a U.S. court, it would first await a reaction from the federal prosecutor's office.

Web site. Blair will also be edited out of the college's promotional videos and his photo and stories heretofore proudly displayed in the journalism school will be taken down, Kunkel said.

Associate Dean Chris Callahan, who knew Blair well when he was a student, was more personally affected by the Times' report.

"I'm f---ing pissed off," Callahan said.

In a letter sent to The Times and read to The Associated Press after his resignation, Blair blamed "personal issues" and apologized for his "lapse of journalistic integrity."

The review began after the editor at the San Antonio Express-

News pointed to similarities in an April 26 piece by Blair and a story that appeared in the Texas paper a week earlier.

The investigation showed that while he was filing stories from around the country, Blair was often in the New York City borough of Brooklyn, even filing expense receipts from stores and restaurants there.

Blair had just moved to the sports desk when he was sent to the newspaper's national desk to help cover the Washington sniper shootings. National editors said they were not informed of Blair's earlier performance problems.

Blair attended the university, but did not graduate, and joined The Times in 1999 after an internship the previous year. He could not be reached for comment.

"I'm shattered," Kunkel said. "It's devastating for everyone — everyone in journalism feels betrayed and obviously, we feel it more acutely because we know Jayson so well... And I'm angry, and everyone's angry."

Blair's name was removed last week from the college's alumni

Educators say budget revision better, still difficult

By Jennifer Coleman
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

SACRAMENTO — Schools were largely spared from across-the-board cuts in the revised budget plan put forth by Gov. Gray Davis Wednesday, but education officials said they would still have to make sacrifices.

The new plan restores money for class-size reduction, special education and nutrition programs, but focuses cuts on other programs, such as books, teacher and principal training and reading assistance.

Davis' revised budget proposal would raise taxes on vehicles, tobacco and the wealthy and make a long list of cuts to close an estimated $38.2 billion shortfall through July 2004.

Schools account for the largest share of the state's general funds, thanks in part to Proposition 98, the voter-approved initiative that dedicates about 40 percent of state revenues to education.

Under Davis' revised spending plan, education would get about $45.6 billion of the $95.8 billion budget. That's $1.5 billion less for education than last year.

These cuts are targeted to specific programs, instead of across-the-board cuts the governor proposed in January, said Susan Murai, president of the California Association of School Business Officials.

"It makes a whole lot more sense," Murai said. "But cuts are still of a magnitude that we're going to see per-pupil cuts in discretionary funds."

Brett McFadden, a legislative advocate for the Association of California School Administrators, said educators had been bracing for even larger cuts, possibly as much as $2.3 billion.

"It's still painful, but it's workable. It's like taking off a few fingers versus taking off a whole arm. We could have lost a limb here," McFadden said.

Because the governor wants to impose new taxes, lawmakers will have to approve legislation that would keep that new revenue from being shared with schools under Proposition 98. Educators said they'd support that move.

"We have a strong feeling that we should get 40 percent of every penny that comes in here," Kerr said, "but sometimes you have to look at the overall picture."

The governor's plan also allows schools to dip into their reserves to pay for day-to-day operations, which could help spare programs such as class size reduction and would stave off a lot of predicted teacher layoffs, Kerr said.

Among the specific cuts Davis proposed are:

- $75 million less for books and other instructional materials, a cut of about 25 percent.
- $85 million less for summer school and other supplemental education programs.
- $60 million cut from two reading programs.
- A 10 percent reduction to school improvement programs, amounting to about $42 million.
- $22.5 million cut from a principal training program. The administration will continue the program, however, to maintain eligibility for a matching grant for the Gates Foundation.
- $114 million less for two programs that train and recruit teachers.

Hollywood fights DVD software

By Ted Bridis
AP TECHNOLOGY WRITER

WASHINGTON — Brian Martin, a computer consultant in Maryland, is careful when he handles the plastic discs in his DVD library of more than 200 movies. But accidents — and scratches — still happen.

"The worst thing is, one little scratch is enough to make the movie skip forward a chapter," Martin said, who estimates his collection at more than $3,000. "That's become really annoying with a few of mine."

An increasingly popular class of software lets consumers make duplicate DVDs using their home computers.

But movie buffs who want to make backups of their treasured DVD libraries are running into a formidable enemy: Hollywood.

Painfully aware of technology's impact on the music industry, movie-makers are headed to court Thursday to persuade U.S. District Judge Susan Illston in San Francisco to declare the distribution of such software illegal under the 1998 Digital Millennium Copyright Act.

The legal battle, which focuses on software products sold by 321 Studios Inc. of Chesterfield, Mo., is emerging as one of the most significant technology debates in years.

The powerful Motion Picture Association of America argues this type of software circumvents the anti-copying digital "locks" that studios employ.

The MPAA maintains consumers whose disc becomes scratched need to buy a new one.

Consumers-rights organizations and some technology groups contend copying software doesn't unlawfully help users violate copyrights, because consumers should be allowed under "fair use" copyright provisions.

"The future of our company is at stake. The future of consumers' expectations and what they perceive to be their rights are in question," says Robert Moore, the head of 321 Studios, which sells its copying software for $99.

The latest software product from Moore's company, called "DVD Xpress," is enough to cause fits for studio executives. Unlike similar programs that can take hours to make copies and span most movies across two blank discs, Xpress can squeeze a near-perfect copy onto a single disc in as little as 20 minutes.

In a minor concession to Hollywood, 321's software adds to each blank disc a warning about copyright laws and refuses to make further copies from a duplicate disc.

"It's almost to the point of a one-click operation, where even the average Joe can make a DVD backup," says Adam Sleight of San Diego, who runs the popular www.mrbass.org Web site with instructions on copying DVD movies.

Sleight says he's copied hundreds of DVD movies onto blank discs, including many Disney films for his two children. One advantage of his efforts: When Sleight makes copies, he eliminates five to 10 minutes of previews and advertisements that typically precede his children's movies.

Slam poets get their groove on

By Samantha Yale
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Poetry will be given a voice Thursday during the slam poetry competition, Another Type of Groove. The event will showcase members from Bullhorn Collective, a nationally renowned group of spoken word poets.

The competition will take place from 7 to 10 p.m. at Yosemite Hall, and will be free for students, staff and the public.

"(We hope to) increase the interest in spoken word poetry and raise issues of race, class and gender," said Mark Fabionar, coordinator of the Multicultural Center.

Fabionar said other goals of the event include sparking consciousness and awareness, promoting a community of ideas.

According to the group's official Web site, Bullhorn Collective was formed in 2002 by champion slam poets Eitan Kadosh and Buddy Wakefield.

Members of Bullhorn Collective have been on HBO, PBS, BET, ESPN, "60 Minutes" and Carnegie Hall, as well as appearing at various festivals and performance venues. They have received positive reviews from every major U.S. newspaper and have been featured in Spin and Time magazines. They have also earned four wins on "It's Showtime at the Apollo."

Sekou Tha Misfit, the nation's current No. 1 slam poet, will compete.

"(We hope to) increase the interest in spoken word poetry and raise issues of race, class and gender."

Mark Fabionar coordinator of the Multicultural Center

The group has been praised by the likes of Kurt Vonnegut, Nobel Prize winner Derek Walcott and rapper Mos Def, to name a few.

This past year, each month a guest slam poet from Bullhorn Collective was brought to campus to perform, Fabionar said.

These events also serve as open microphone nights where students and faculty have the opportunity to present their own spoken word poetry.

Fabionar explained that this event would be the grand finale.

"We wanted them to continue the energy to write and express," he said.

Students will not have a chance to slam at this event, but will be able to judge the poets by awarding points.

Eleven poets will compete in three elimination rounds, until a winner is announced.

"They have really diverse speakers and poets," Fabionar said.

Buddy Wakefield, performer and co-founder of Bullhorn Collective, left his job at a bio-medical firm in 2001 and sold or gave away his possessions in order to concentrate full-time on slam poetry.

"I love to write, first with guitar and singing," he said.

When he realized that wasn't working out for him, Wakefield took up slam poetry in 1999.

"Slam is actually a gimmick to get people in to poetry," he said.

Wakefield added that the Bullhorn Collective competitors are a talented group.

"They're really consistent in rocking a crowd," Wakefield said. "They're all quality."

He said it's more than just entertainment, however.

"There's an ultimate goal of moving forward in to a positive place and being realistic about it," he said.

Former U. of Maryland student committed 'journalistic fraud'

From Staff Reports
THE DIAMONDBACK (U. MARYLAND)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE PARK, Md. — A New York Times reporter and former Diamondback editor in chief "committed frequent acts of journalistic fraud," including stealing material from other newspapers, inventing quotes and lying about his whereabouts, according to an investigation conducted by The Times.

The review found problems in at least 36 of the 73 articles written by Jayson Blair from the time he began receiving national reporting assignments in late October to his May 1 resignation. The Times described the episode as "a low point in the 152-year history of the newspaper."

Blair, 27, "used these techniques to write falsely about emotionally charged moments in recent history, from the deadly sniper attacks in suburban Washington to the anguish of families grieving for loved ones killed in Iraq," according to a story the Times published Tuesday.

The 7,500-word story, which ran on the front page and carried over to four full inside pages, was accompanied by an editor's note apologizing to Times readers and a detailed account of articles in which falsification, plagiarism and other problems were discovered by a team of Times reporters and researchers.

"I can't remember anything like this anywhere from the 'Bayside Bugle' to the New York Times," said Thomas Kunkel, dean of the journalism school.

Kunkel said he plans to send a memo to all journalism students and faculty about Blair today.

The Times cited several reasons for not detecting the problems with Blair, including "a failure of communication among senior editors; few complaints from the subjects of (Blair's) articles; his savviness and his ingenious ways of covering his tracks."

comes off like a private club, due to its remote location and that people don't often have to wait for a tee, due to the three alternating tees.

Student Rates: Annual membership is $99, which and offers a discounted rate. Without a membership, though, green fees run $45 on weekdays and $60 on weekends, to go along with a $16 fee for golf carts for any time.

Course Accessories: Driving range, two putting greens and a chipping area. Reynolds also gives lessons.

For tee times call 343-1214

Chalk Mountain Golf Course

Location: 10000 El Bordo Ave., Atascadero

Type of Course: 18-hole

Course Layout: 5,926 yards from the white tees.

Marquee Hole: 381-yard Hole No. 4, known as Cardiac Hill. "It goes up, straight up the hill," course employee Joel Clay said. "The rumor is someone had a heart attack on the hill when it opened, but I don't believe that."

Longest Hole: Hole No. 8, 547 yards total from the white tees, although the blue tees start golfers close to a half mile back from the tee at 567 yards.

Comparison to Other Courses: "It's an affordable, 18-hole course," Clay said. At $10 after 12 p.m. for Cal Poly students, Chalk Mountain is one of the cheapest courses in the area. Besides afternoons, rates run $24 during the week and $29 on weekends.

Course Accessories: "We got the whole gamut," Clay said. Golf carts cost $22 for 18 holes and $11 for nine. Lessons are offered by club pros.

For tee times call 466-8848

Cypress Ridge Golf Course

Location: 780 Cypress Ridge Parkway, Arroyo Grande

Type of Course: 18-hole

Course Layout: 5,838 yards from the white tees. Five miles from the coast, the ocean can be seen from a few holes.

Marquee Hole: Hole No. 18, 454 yards from the white tees and beset with a lake, waterfall and sand traps. "It's well-bunkered," assistant professional Jordan Bridges said.

Longest Hole: The 507-yard 13th Hole.

Comparison to Other Courses: "This is the only course of its kind in the area," Bridges said. "It's more of an upper-scale, upper-end golf course ... It's the closest thing you're going to get for highly competitive events."

Student Rates: None. Remember to stop by the bank before playing this course. Green fees run as high as $75 on weekends, although the 3 p.m. twilight rate kicks fees down to $55 on the weekend and $45 during the week. Bridges said that a course like this in Los Angeles would cost $200 to play.

Course Accessories: Putting green, driving range and a Golf Academy that offers lessons "of all types," Bridges said.

For tee times call 474-7979

Morro Bay Golf Course

Location: 201 State Park Road, Morro Bay.

Type of Course: 18-hole

Course Layout: Over three miles long at 6,073 yards from the men's tees, Morro Bay Golf Course overlooks Morro Bay and is adjacent to a state park.

Marquee Hole: Hole No. 13, 423 yards from the men's tees, running downhill and buffered by Eucalyptus trees, with a view of Morro Bay.

Longest Hole: Six holes check in at over 400 yards, but Hole No. 16 takes the cake at 490 yards, edging out Hole No. 1 by four yards. Overall, only four holes are less than 300 yards.

Comparison to Other Courses: "I've never played here before, but I like the beauty," golfer and Del Mar resident Nina Baldwin said.

"The toughest thing about this golf course is the greens," employee Jesse Pereira said. "They're deceiving, hard to read."

Student Rates: They apply only on weekdays, $11 before 4 p.m., $8 after. Weekend rates run at $38 during peak hours, $20 for off-peak and $10 for sundown.

Course Accessories: Golf carts are available, at $22 standard and a discount rate of $8. Pereira said Cal Poly has its golf class on the course on Wednesdays. Individual or group lessons can be scheduled seven days a week with Jim Coles.

For tee times call 782-8060

Dairy Creek Golf Course

Location: 2990 Dairy Creek Road, off Highway 1, across from Cuesta College

Type of Course: 18-hole

Course Layout: 5,561 yards from the men's tees, although the course runs 6,548 yards from the gold tees.

Marquee Hole: Hole No. 2, 367 yards, with a tight 22-yard fairway. The hole runs uphill, into the wind and has environmentally sensitive areas on the right.

Longest Hole: Hole No. 14, 481 yards and par five. Three other holes are longer than 400 yards, and overall, 12 of 18 are longer than 300 yards.

Comparison to Other Courses: "This is probably the most-played course by students," employee Jeff Lawrie said, citing location, price and availability of tee times as the reason for this. The course has the same owner as Morro Bay, so a lot of the same rules apply.

Student Rates: Weekday rates are the same as Morro Bay. Weekend rates run at $32 during peak time, $17 after and $10 for sundown.

Course Accessories: Just like Morro Bay, golf carts are available at $22 standard and $8 discount. The course also features a driving range, putting green and practice facility equipped with a chipping green.

For tee times call 782-8060

Laguna Lane Municipal Golf Course

Location: 11175 Los Osos Valley Road, between Madonna Road and Foothill Boulevard

Type of Course: Nine-hole executive

Course Layout: A very short course at 1,284 yards from the men's tees, Laguna is known for short fairways and raised greens, described by Cal Poly student Jeff Lawrie as "upside down tee cups."

Marquee Hole: Hole No. 6, considered by golfer Dave Smith and starter Jim Frye as the hardest hole. Running 115 yards from the men's tees and 75 yards from the women's tees, the hole goes along the creek, with the green sloping away.

Longest Hole: Hole No. 1, 244 yards from the men's tees.

Comparison to Other Courses: "This is only a nine-hole so-called executive course, so it really doesn't compare with other courses," Smith said. "I will say this, though, it's beautifully kept."

Student Rates: $ 6.25 before 3 p.m. on weekdays, $4 after. The price is $7 on weekends, but the twilight rate still applies after 3 p.m.. Smith said 80 percent of golfers on the course after 3 p.m. are students.

Course Accessories: No golf carts. There is a practice green and an enclosed, 70-yard driving range. Large buckets of balls are $3. Lessons are available Tuesday and Saturday through a club pro.

For tee times call 781-7309

Sea Pines Golf Course

Location: 1945 Solano St., Los Osos

Type of Courses: Nine hole executive

Course Layout: 1,886 yards from the white tees.

Marquee Hole: Hole No. 5, which runs 266 yards, after golfers tee off at the white tees, looking directly at Morro Rock.

Longest Hole: 343-yard hole No. 3

Comparison to Other Courses: Assistant professional Tom McFadden said Sea Pines is a relatively quick and easy course to play. "It doesn't take much time," McFadden said. "Usually, (people) can get right on the golf course ... And of course it's affordable."

Student Rates: Cuesta and Cal Poly students, along with faculty at either school, can play for $8 after 12 p.m. every day.

Course Accessories: Driving range, sports bar, 44-unit lodge, two putting greens, a chipping range and lessons by appointment. A free clinic is also offered on the driving range on the first and third Saturday of every month at noon, provided participants buy a bucket of balls to hit.

regionals with a few wins.

While some would think playing junior college ball first might be a step off the beaten path, LeDuc said he looks at this opportunity as "the best thing that ever happened" to him, as he was part of the best team Cuesta has ever seen.

He said he hopes to inspire people to stay motivated and always reach as high as possible to obtain their goals.

"All I can say is that everything happens for a reason," LeDuc said. "Don't cheat yourself because you can achieve more than you can imagine. I know if you told me my freshman year that all this would have happened, I would've laughed hysterically."

There's 60 feet, 6 inches between the pitcher's mound and home plate. However, this distance can seem much longer for players trying to take their first steps onto a college baseball team.

At the collegiate level, many athletes are scouted and enticed to play ball at a particular university. Yet there are always those few talented athletes that fly below scouts' radars.

This was exactly what Cal Poly relief pitcher Dennis LeDuc faced his freshman year of 2000-01, when he tried out for the baseball team as a walk-on and was cut.

Despite the circumstances, LeDuc did not give up on his dream to play baseball.

"I practiced that entire year with my buddy," LeDuc said. "He was awesome, he had (Division I) baseball experience and helped bring me along as far as encouraging me to keep lifting and he caught for me every week that year."

This relationship, along with his strong religious beliefs, kept him motivated enough to stick with the sport.

After the year, Cal Poly's former head coach Ritch Price told LeDuc to play at Cuesta to gain more experience. Cuesta's coach at that time, Larry Lee, readily accepted LeDuc to the team.

"He wasn't going to give up on his dream," Lee said. "He would do anything in his power to better himself."

LeDuc was also juggling a mechanical engineering major with baseball and taking 12 units at both Cal Poly and Cuesta.

"Dennis is the kind of athlete who uses people telling him he can't do something to make him work harder," Lee said. "He wants to go out there and prove people wrong."

LeDuc played at Cuesta and that year the team just missed winning the state title. He worked extremely hard to improve his ability to compete at Cal Poly's level.

"We had an amazing season," LeDuc said. "It was awesome to be a part of that team."

At the end of the 2001-02 year, LeDuc was drafted by the Cincinnati Reds in the 45th round and was named an All-American for his pitching. But it was not until Lee became Cal Poly's head coach last July that LeDuc turned down the Reds and became a Mustang.

"It just seemed natural that I would go with him," LeDuc said. "I had gained respect after having the season I had the year before."

Since joining the team, LeDuc has added an extra dimension to the pitching staff and been a motivator on and off the field.

"He is so mature and hard working, one of the best kinds of athletes," Lee said. "With players that have Dennis' work ethic, the sky's the limit."

This year the team is fighting injuries and close losses, but LeDuc is confident with the team can make
