Abstract

We propose to lure your gaze into our pages by offering for your purveyance delicious, sparkling romance. Though oft have invitations – even flatteries – been addressed to you, how can you now resist the unique recounting of passion between Paris and H– of T– told by a certain bold champion of our Society who is as handsome as he is anonymous; or can you refuse an adventurous, bloody tale of pirates, written by a dashing teenager who later became that famous arch communist, Friedrich Engels?

Editorial

Dear Reader - Bold or Coy -

We propose to lure your gaze into our pages by offering for your purveyance delicious, sparkling romance. Though oft have invitations - even flatteries -- been addressed to you, how can you now resist the unique recounting of passion between Paris and H- of T- told by a certain bold champion of our Society who is as handsome as he is anonymous; or can you refuse an adventurous, bloody tale of pirates, written by a dashing teenager who later became that famous arch-communist, Friedrich Engels? This, the only fictional story he wrote, is translated into English perhaps for the first time by that eminent bluestocking, Christine Lowentroun. We also bring you news of Nessie, the revelations of apprentices, and an appearance by the moon.

If you like to become acquainted with authors, or if you like chickens in theory or reality, let us introduce you - via interview - to Rev. Walter M. Wangerin, Jr., author of The Book of the Dun Cow. Lastly, with all love and respect, we have a special treat for Mythlore readers everywhere.

So throw off those garters, unlace the passementerie, consign the parure to the safe, rest in the shade of some great oak and surrender yourselves to the pleasures of Mythellany 83/84.
