

Locke on Persons and Personal Identity

Ruth Boeker

University College Dublin

ruth.boeker@ucd.ie

Book forthcoming with
Oxford University Press

Table of Contents

Preface

1 Introduction

- 1.1 Locke's innovative approach to debates about persons and personal identity
- 1.2 Aims and scope of the book
- 1.3 Summary of chapters

2 Locke's Kind-dependent Approach to Identity

- 2.1 The principium individuationis
- 2.2 Identity
 - 2.2.1 Names and ideas of kind F
 - 2.2.2 Specifying persistence conditions for members of kind F
- 2.3 Identity and individuation

3 Problems with other Interpretations of Locke's Account of Identity

- 3.1 Relative identity, coincidence, and absolute identity
- 3.2 Human beings, persons, and Locke's metaphysical agnosticism
- 3.3 Different senses of distinctness
- 3.4 Lessons from the controversy
- 3.5 Other interpretive options

4 Moral Personhood and Personal Identity

- 4.1 Locke's moral account of personhood
- 4.2 From personhood to personal identity
- 4.3 Further reflections on the moral dimension

5 Consciousness and Same Consciousness

- 5.1 Locke on consciousness
- 5.2 Locke on sameness of consciousness
 - 5.2.1 Revival of past experiences through memory
 - 5.2.2 Mineness and appropriation
 - 5.2.3 Unity
 - 5.2.4 Temporality
 - 5.2.5 Locke's multiple aspects account of same consciousness

6 Circularity and Insufficiency Worries

- 6.1 Different versions of circularity
- 6.2 Butler's circularity objection
- 6.3 Insufficiency worries

7 Locke's Response to the Problems of his Predecessors

7.1 Locke's predecessors

7.2 Epistemological problems

7.3 Materialism and the afterlife

7.4 Cartesian views of the soul

7.5 Non-Cartesian immaterial views of the soul

7.6 Human beings as unions of immaterial souls and material bodies

7.7 Locke's response

8 Personal Identity, Transitivity, and Divine Justice

8.1 The traditional transitivity objection

8.2 Non-transitive interpretations

8.3 The religious context

8.4 Consciousness and transitivity

8.5 Divine justice and repentance

9 Locke's Underlying Background Beliefs

10 Locke and his Early Critics and Defenders: Metaphysical and Epistemic Differences

10.1 Locke's early critics and defenders on perpetually thinking souls

10.1.1 Disagreement about innate ideas

10.1.2 Different accounts of consciousness

10.1.3 Disagreement about unity, simplicity, and composition

10.2 Locke's early critics and defenders on the thinking matter hypothesis

10.2.1 Disagreement about essences

10.2.2 Disagreement whether matter can be active

10.2.3 Disagreement about unity, simplicity, and composition

11 Locke and his Early Critics and Defenders: Moral and Religious Differences

11.1 Criticism of Locke's psychological approach to personal identity

11.1.1 Shaftesbury's criticism

11.1.2 Hume's criticism

11.2 Moral personhood

11.2.1 Shaftesbury on virtue and character development

11.2.2 Hume on selves, passions, and sociability

11.2.3 Alternatives to divine law

Concluding Remarks