

55 William Street.

Melbourne 22 March 1887

My dear Andrew,

I called upon Robertson again about Freeman's book & pointed out to them they had had it on their catalogue, although they told me they never had it - They tried to make out they never said so, but I know distinctly they did - As Mullen had ordered some copies some time before I applied to him I ordered the copy from him, and it is to be posted to you directly on arrival - I paid 10/6 for it & 6d for postage - This payment exhausts the money you sent me -

R.P.'s elevation to the Bench is an interesting them of news for me -

It will have to be a good elevation too won't it? I should like to see him perched up in Court showing his beard with becoming gravity. But a more absorbing spectacle would be Jack Dodds
- presiding in the Mahomedan Causes jurisdiction, for instance

I see Bobbie has been offered the Solicitor-Generalship - I suppose he'll accept it. I am very glad to hear that he has won such good opinion. It is clear that some of your chickens will do you credit. This will serve to make up for the failures of others, although dear Paddy, lest you should misunderstand me, let me say I know you have room in your heart for them without regard to these matters.

I have gone out of the Shaving & Tobaccos line.
The matter fell through - after various delays & disappointments Dave then went up to Langourey and entered into a Buck business with his Cousin Dave. A disagreement arose as to remuneration here which ended in his giving this up. He left lately for Camperdown, and I have not yet heard what he is doing. He is much better physically than he was; but he has a great repugnance to anything connected with office life - these changes and general restlessness give me no little concern. and I should be more at ease if he were to take to something permanently.

I trust that Made and the children are now quite restored to their usual health.
By the bye, what's the youngest Kinchin called Melvyn for?
I don't see any points about that boy. Please recollect to explain this label to me.

I cannot yet say whether there is any chance of my coming over at Easter. Things are much about the same in regard to that probability.

Have you heard anything from that compound of laudanum and coffin-lead called Patten about the English business?
Mark Swan's Beef Contract lives again in this precious piece of hip van Winkelism.
With love to Made and the boys and girls of all ages. Believe me always affectionately yours
D. G. M.
