A. I. CLARK PAPERS

Papers of Judge Andrew Inglis Clark (1848-1907), known for the "Hare Clark electoral system" and his work on the Australian constitution for federation, and his son Justice Andrew Inglis Clark (1882-1953).

Andrew Inglis Clark sr. was the son of Ann (Inglis) and Alexander Russell Clark, (1809-1894), an engineer, who settled in Tasmania in 1833 and undertook contracts such as the Port Arthur water and tread corn mill, works at the coal mines and Launceston water works. A.I. Clark served as an engineering apprentice with his father, but turned to Law later. With the papers is a letter book of the father, A. R. Clark, 1842 - 1846 relating to some of his contracts.

Papers of A.I. Clark sr. include letters received from friends and colleagues, including american lawyers, a few papers relating to his legal practice, letters of appointment to political offices, papers relating to Australian federation and the Australian constitution and drafts of essays, speeches or articles on law, politics, philosophy and religion.

Papers of A.I. Clark jr. include correspondence while serving in the army 1915 - 1919, correspondence with family and friends and family photographs, correspondence relating to his law practice and notes and articles on law, and notes on Tasmanian statutes and minutes of the editorial board on reprinting the Tasmanian Statutes (1935).

NOTE ON PROVENANCE

The papers were deposited in the University Archives in May 1963 by Mrs Elizabeth Alice Henry, who inherited them under the will of her aunt, Vera Clark (nee Chancellor), who was the widow of A.I. Clark and who died on 2 May 1963. Mrs Henry was also the executor of Mrs Clark's will, granted probate 10 July 1963.

A.I. Clark sr., who died in 1907, left a very simple will leaving everything to his wife, Grace, who was sole executor (probate granted 26 November 1907). His widow, Grace Clark (nee Ross) who died in 1909, left her husband's law library and his books and writings on law, philosophy and political economy to her son Andrew Inglis Clark, who was also appointed executor of the copyright of her husband's book on Australian Constitutional Law and other literary works.

A.I. Clark the younger who died in 1953, by his very complicated will, left all his papers, manuscripts and other writings including letters and his photographs to his wife. He directed that his law books should be sold (indeed he circulated a catalogue of books for sale before he died). Most other furniture and personal estate was left to his wife for life and was then to be sold.

ANDREW INGLIS CLARK
(1848 - 1907)

A. I. Clark (1848 - 1907), barrister, politician and judge was the youngest son of Alexander Russell Clark. After qualifying as an engineer he studied law and was called to the Bar in 1877. He practised law and was for a time in partnership with Matthew Wilkes Simmons. However he was also a member of the House of Assembly 1878 - 1882 and 1887 - 1897 and was appointed Attorney General in 1887. Humanitarian and progressive, he introduced many reform bills. In 1898 he was appointed Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court and Senior Judge in 1901, and he was also Acting Governor in J. Stokell Dodds absence from the State in 1901. He was a delegate to the Federal Councils of 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891 and 1894 and drafted a constitution based mainly on the Constitution of the U.S.A. Clark visited America in 1890 and 1897 and corresponded regularly with Oliver Wendell Holmes and other lawyers and Unitarians. Clark was an active member of debating and literary societies and was also interested in the Unitarian Church and he wrote many essays and speeches on political, philosophical and religious topics. Few were published but many copies handwritten in exercise books were circulated amongst his friends.

A.I. Clark married in 1878 Grace Paterson Ross, daughter of John Ross, a Hobart shipbuilder. They had five sons: Alexander, a marine engineer; Andrew Inglis, another lawyer and judge; Conway, an architect; Wendell, a medical practitioner, and Carrell, Clerk to the House of Assembly. Another son, Melvin, died in infancy and there were two daughters, Ethel and Esma.

F ESSAYS AND SPEECHES

Clark wrote numerous essays on politics and philosophy and various drafts and copies were handwritten in exercise books, mixed with other essays and notes, often by turning the book in reverse and using the blank pages. Some of the studies relate to the Constitution of the U.S.A. and the proposed Commonwealth of Australia. Essays are rarely dated and there is not usually any indication which draft is the earliest.
