

untitled, ambiguity and architecture

by

Dennis Steven Kosovac

Bachelor of Humanities and Arts
Carnegie Mellon University, 2016

Submitted to the Department of Architecture
in Partial Fulfillment of the Requirements for the Degree of

Master of Architecture

at the

Massachusetts Institute of Technology

May 2020

© 2020 Massachusetts Institute of Technology. All rights reserved

The author hereby grants to MIT permission to reproduce and to distribute publicly paper and electronic copies of this thesis document in whole or in part in any medium now known or hereafter created.

Signature of Author: _____

Department of Architecture
May 19, 2020

Certified by: _____

Andrew Scott
Interim Head
Thesis Supervisor

Accepted by: _____

Leslie K. Norford
Professor of Building Technology
Chair, Department Committee on Graduate Students

Thesis Supervisor

Andrew Scott
Interim Department Head

Readers

Rosalyn Shieh, MArch
Marion Mahoney Emerging Practice
Fellow

Hans Tursack, MArch
Pietro Belluschi Teaching Fellow

untitled, ambiguity and architecture

by

Dennis Steven Kosovac

Submitted to the Department of Architecture on

May 19, 2020

in Partial Fulfillment of the Requirements for the Degree of Master of Architecture

ABSTRACT

This thesis seeks to expand Robert Venturi's concept of ambiguity in architecture to include meanings that, extending beyond the formal and semiotic, are rooted in narrative. It takes as a precedent the work of Larry Sultan and Mike Mandel, two artists whose book Evidence explores both formal and narrative ambiguity in photography. This expanded definition of ambiguity evokes the mercurial and conflicting thoughts, feelings, facts, and memories that are at the core of architectural experience yet remain conspicuously absent from contemporary discourse.

untitled consists of four books that collectively and equally constitute the thesis. Each book can be interpreted independently or in dialogue with its companions.

Braddock, Pennsylvania is a steel town downriver from Pittsburgh, in Allegheny County. The town's dualities are manifest in the narrative tensions between past and present, mind and body, growth and decay. It is home to the first Carnegie Free Library in the US as well as to the Edgar Thomson Steel Works - one of America's earliest, and still-operating, steel mills. Braddock Avenue runs the length of the town and serves as a mile-long Main Street that encompasses the breadth of the town's vernacular American architectural history. The thesis takes as its site the empty lots along Braddock Ave. that now make up nearly half of the streetscape.

Without speculating on the uncertain future of the town's industry, the project engages the divergent narratives of the town by imagining a renewal of Braddock Avenue. A formal strategy of mirroring the existing urban fabric is deployed in an act analogous to the production of photographic images. Where possible, existing buildings are mirrored onto adjacent empty lots; in this act each building is isolated, duplicated, and transformed. The buildings' bounds are reproduced inversely while their materiality and tectonic languages are replaced by new mass timber structural systems and surfaces. Together with these mirrored forms, the sharply differing color of light reflected on these new materials evokes divergent memories and feelings associated with the work of photographers like Diane Arbus and Stephen Shore, who capture the melancholy, peculiarities and optimism of American urban abjection.

The dialectic between the town and the mill is represented by a new community center inserted at the heart of Braddock Avenue, radically skewed on an open site adjacent to the Carnegie Library. This singular anomaly is a distorted mirror of the building forms found in the Edgar Thomson Steel Mill, representing the capacity of mirroring to make architecture participate in an expanding field. The new building's typology, materiality, tectonics, and programs collectively evoke divergent readings that are at once historic and speculative, sacred and profane.

Thesis Advisor: Andrew Scott

Title: Interim Department Head

Table of Contents

abstract	15
image	33
reflection	125
remains	137
bibliogphray	150

untitled
ambiguity in architecture

abstract

This thesis seeks to expand Robert Venturi's concept of ambiguity in architecture to include meanings that, extending beyond the formal and semiotic, are rooted in narrative. It takes as a precedent the work of Larry Sultan and Mike Mandel, two artists whose book Evidence explores both formal and narrative ambiguity in photography. This expanded definition of ambiguity evokes the mercurial and conflicting thoughts, feelings, facts, and memories that are at the core of architectural experience yet remain conspicuously absent from contemporary discourse.

untitled consists of four books that collectively and equally constitute the thesis. Each book can be interpreted independently or in dialogue with its companions:

abstract sets forth the disciplinary premise of the thesis.

image documents the project through a sequence of drawings, diagrams, renderings, and photographs. Interspersed with these documents are found and appropriated references that expand the understanding of the project. Equal weight is given to each image, minimizing visual hierarchy so that sequencing becomes the primary narrative tool.

reflection documents oft-omitted elements of the thesis: fleeting and fragmented thoughts, feelings, desires, and intentions behind the project.

remains includes the parts and pieces integral to the process of the thesis but without a place in the other three books.

Braddock, Pennsylvania is a steel town downriver from Pittsburgh, in Allegheny County. The town's dualities are manifest in the narrative tensions between past and present, mind and body, growth and decay. It is home to the first Carnegie Free Library in the US as well as to the Edgar Thomson Steel Works - one of America's earliest, and still-operating, steel mills. Braddock Avenue runs the length of the town and serves as a mile-long Main Street that encompasses the breadth of the town's vernacular American architectural history. The thesis takes as its site the empty lots along Braddock Ave. that now make up nearly half of the streetscape.

Without speculating on the uncertain future of the town's industry, the project engages the divergent narratives of the town by imagining a renewal of Braddock Avenue. A formal strategy of mirroring the existing urban fabric is deployed in an act analogous to the production of photographic images. Where possible, existing buildings are mirrored onto adjacent empty lots; in this act each building is isolated, duplicated, and transformed. The buildings' bounds are reproduced inversely while their materiality and tectonic languages are replaced by new mass timber structural systems and surfaces. Together with these mirrored forms, the sharply differing color of light reflected on these new materials evokes divergent memories and feelings associated with the work of photographers like Diane Arbus and Stephen Shore, who capture the melancholy, peculiarities and optimism of American urban abjection.

The dialectic between the town and the mill is represented by a new community center inserted at the heart of Braddock Avenue, radically skewed on an open site adjacent to the Carnegie Library. This singular anomaly is a distorted mirror of the building forms found in the Edgar Thomson Steel Mill, representing the capacity of mirroring to make architecture participate in an expanding field. The new building's typology, materiality, tectonics, and programs collectively evoke divergent readings that are at once historic and speculative, sacred and profane.

The remaining pages of abstract contain a series of precedents, each numbered and cited at the end of this book.

01

02

03

04

05

06

07

08

09

10

11

12

13

16

14

17

15

18

image credits

- 01 Minoru Yamasaki, World Trade Center
- 02 John Hejduk, Torres Hejduk
- 03 Harry Cobb, Fountain Place
- 04 Edwin Lutyens, Munstead Wood
- 05 Lacaton & Vassal, FRAC Dunkerque
- 06 John Hejduk, House for Two Brothers
- 07 Shaker Dwelling House
- 08 Shaker Dwelling House
- 09 Shaker Dwelling House

image credits

- 10 Valerio Olgiati, National Park Centre
- 11 Valerio Olgiati, National Park Centre
- 12 Valerio Olgiati, National Park Centre
- 13 Do-ho Suh, Staircase-III
- 14 Do-ho Suh, 3 Corridors
- 15 Do-ho Suh, Hub-2, Breakfast Corner, 260-7
- 16 Rachel Whiteread, GHOST, GHOST I
- 17 Rachel Whiteread, Detached I
- 18 Rachel Whiteread, Ghost House

image

01

02

03

04

05

06

89

07

08

09

10

image credits

- 01 Braddock sign
- 02 old view of mill across river
- 03 Latoya Ruby Frazier, Notions of Family
- 04 Main St., Braddock, Vintage Postcard
- 05 Braddock Post Office, Vintage Postcard
- 06 Historic photo of Braddock, PA
- 07 Original plan of the Braddock Carnegie Library
- 08 Historic photo of the Braddock Carnegie Library
- 09 Adult Reading Room, Carnegie Library of Homestead
- 10 Gymnasium, Braddock Carnegie Library

reflection

reflection

My parents took me to visit my grandmother at her home in McKeesport, Pennsylvania when I was a boy. She lived in a small house near the top of the hill in the steel town, a few miles downriver from Braddock. When my father was a boy he worked summer in the mill at the bottom of the hill. McKeesport has become a ruin, but Braddock persists.

The thesis became two theses:

1. The “thesis” as design project defined by site, context, program, design, plans, sections, renderings, diagrams, etc. Over the course of the semester this thesis was overtaken by the second:
2. The meta-thesis: an inquiry into what a thesis is, should, or could be.

Architecture is experience. Experience necessitates an intentioned slowing, attention turned inward. Yet, the academy asks: what is the tweet? The tweet is: the tweet is dead.
Death of the singular, of the architect as such.

I have both personally and anecdotally encountered this question repeatedly: why does your thesis matter now? Our current moment has become one of both transition and disjuncture. Assuming the validity of this question, what does it mean to begin a thesis in one reality, and to finish it in another? How do we design for an uncertain future?

“A reflection...an opposite that is the same, an other that is also clearly yourself.”

Daniel Mendelsohn

“I’ll be your mirror reflect what you are, in case you don’t know”

The Velvet Underground

Metaphor is intrinsic to human experience; we make sense of the world through metaphor. In the thesis the mirror acts as both formal logic and as metaphor.

The mirror is deployed as a metaphor of absence, loss, growth, and transformation. Architecture does not start with nothing. We see the world, we create anew - what do we keep, what remains?

So too is the mirror analogous to the (re)production of images. Photographers and artists like Andy Warhol identify, isolate, and duplicate the “real,” and in so doing both transform and reflect the world back to itself. untitled seeks to do the same with architecture.

I spent the initial weeks of the thesis thinking and writing about the relationship between light, architecture, and photography. I came to understand that light alone would prove an insufficient means to guide the design project in a meaningful way. Light was too literal and too subjective to deploy as a formal or graphic device.

Yet light arises repeatedly as an unstated design interest. Light serves as a tie between art and architecture. It is both the medium of photography and a defining quality of spatial experience. It is visual and bodily, something that we can see and literally feel with our bodies. Light prompts physical sensations, emotions, and a sense of time and place (narrative). In the project it creates a sense of emptiness but it also emphasizes the textures and colors of the buildings. In so doing the project attempts a visual realism that ties the work back to its photographic precedents.

I want to be both artist and architect. I do not want to slip between the two but rather I want to be both at all times. I want to design as an artist and make art as a architect.

remains

01

02

03

Compliments of Paramount Theatre
Braddock, Pa.

04

05

06

image credits

- 01 Philip Johnson, Ghost House
- 02 David Hammons, Day's End
- 03 Braddock National Bank, Braddock, PA
- 04 Vintage pamphlet from the Paramount Theater
- 05 The Times Theater, Braddock, PA
- 06 Latoya Ruby Frazier, Notions of Family

bibliography, abridged

Barthes, R. (1988). Camera lucida: reflections on photography. New York: The Noonday Press.

Caruso, A. (2009). The feeling of things. Barcelona: Polígrafa.

Sultan, L., Mandel, M., Phillips, S. S., & Forth, R. F. (2018). Evidence. New York: Distributed Art Publishers, Inc.

Shore, S. (2008). American surfaces. New York: Phaidon Press.

Venturi, R. (1977). Complexity and contradiction in architecture: Robert Venturi. Place of publication not identified: Architectural Press/Museum of Modern Art.

Young, M. (2015). The estranged object. Chicago, IL: The Graham Foundation.

