UM Alpha Phi Alpha wins National Collegiate Step Show

BY PETE PORTER
tjporter@go.olemiss.edu

The Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity at The University of Mississippi danced its way to victory in the National Collegiate Step Show at the 92nd annual Alpha Phi Alpha General Convention in Austin, Texas, this past weekend.

The 14 members of the Epsilon Omega Chapter beat out three other teams at the Alpha Phi Alpha National Convention to bring its first national championship home to Oxford. The team was caught a bit off guard by the win according to chapter president Odie Johnson.

“At first we were in complete shock,” said Johnson, a senior biology major. “But after it hit us that we won, we were beyond excited. The feeling was indescribable.”

Johnson said the Alphas’ championship was the result of lots of hard work and determination that began last fall when the team was formed.

“We had a lot of practice, a lot. It took a while for everyone to become comfortable with each and every step. We knew it would take some time to get where it needed to be in order to have a chance to win.”

All of the Alphas’ hard work payed off as they hit their stride during the spring semester, the most important time for the team all year.

The road to Austin began with the Mississippi District Convention, consisting of all the fraternity’s chapters from around the state. The Ole Miss Alphas won this convention, thus moving on to the Southern Regional Convention where they competed against seven other teams from chapters across the South. The team also won this event, thus qualifying for the National Step Show Championship in Austin.

After winning the regional convention, the team entered the 2013 King of Memphis Stepshow held at the University of Memphis April 13th. Learning about it by word of mouth, step team captain Alex Isom said it was not only a good way to prepare for the national convention, but also nice to face competition from around the Southeast.

“It was one of those last minute things we entered to prepare ourselves for the convention in Austin,” said Isom, a recent graduate from Hernando with a major in exercise science. “We entered really just to practice, but we ended up winning the whole thing.”

Isom, who was in charge of creating the steps, said the team didn’t change anything from their regional competition before the Memphis show, adding that the regional show was a great momentum builder for the team going into nationals.

“We didn’t change one thing we used in regionals, but it worked to our advantage. Everyone was spot on, and the win really gave us the confidence we needed going to Austin,” Isom said.

Alpha Phi Alpha was founded in 1906 at Cornell University by a group of African-American students who formed the fraternity to stick together in order to survive the racial hostility they faced. Among its famous members are Gene Upshaw,

Progress is progress

BY CASEY HOLLIDAY
cahollid@go.olemiss.edu

On Sunday, Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy denied a bid from Proposition 8 supporters to halt gay marriages that had become legal in California, following the lifting of the ban by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

It was another moment of celebration for same sex couples, as well as all supporters of gay marriage. With pride parades taking place in New York City, San Francisco, Chicago, Paris and dozens of other cities around the world this past weekend, the timing could not have been better.

When I opened Yahoo! last Wednesday and saw that the Supreme Court had found the Defense of Marriage Act unconstitutional, I will be honest and say it made me tear up quite a bit. Though I am not currently dating anyone (hint hint everyone, I'm single!) and marriage is not in my near future, the steps we have taken towards progress astound me.

I'm gay. One day, I would like to be married. Unless there is some outrageous transformation or law passed, that probably won't happen anytime soon here in Mississippi. The Supreme Court did not make the sweeping ruling on same sex marriage bans that supporters had hoped for, leaving the legality of them in limbo.

To me, gay marriage isn't a religious issue. When the government began to offer legal benefits to marriage, there became two parts of marriage: the legal and religious.

My Mormon church probably wouldn't recognize my marriage as sacred or "real" like it does straight marriages, and that doesn't negatively impact my life in any way. But, at least in some states, the federal government would see it as equal, regardless of what gender my partner is, and guarantee me more than 1,000 benefits.

As a gay person, it is incredibly difficult to watch people tell me that I shouldn't be afforded the latter because their religion deems it unnatural and marriage is "sacred."

The religious right argues that the Supreme Court rulings infringe upon their religious liberties, forcing them to accept it or be labeled such awful terms as "homophobic" or "anti-gay."

I don't believe that being gay is a choice. I have close friends, however, that do. They're not "homophobic" or "anti-gay," and I would never call them that. It's simply their belief, something I would never fault them for.

They do, however, believe in same sex marriage. I, and other Americans like me, shouldn't be punished for others' religious beliefs. Hindus don't eat beef, why aren't we trying to ban the consumption of cow for everyone in America?

The Supreme Court stopped short of declaring bans on gay marriage unconstitutional, saying that it's the right of the states to define marriage however they want.

My love is not less than anyone else's, and it shouldn't be classified as such just because some people believe it's wrong. Why should the state of Mississippi be the one to decide if my love is real enough to be married?

The Supreme Court made great strides by finding DOMA unconstitutional, and the failure of Prop 8 is also a success.

At the same time, it's hard not to wish they had taken that extra step. Progress is progress though, right? Right?

An opinion writer's opinion on opinions

BY ANNA RUSH
akrush1@gmail.com

The past week has been a whirlwind of controversial issues. Paula Deen using an extremely insensitive word and the commercial fallout that resulted, the Supreme Court's ruling regarding same sex marriage, the George Zimmerman-Trayvon Martin court proceedings, and a host of other events have sparked conversations everywhere. Everyone seems to be voicing their opinion on these polarizing issues. In light of all if this, I must confess something to you. It may seem contradictory coming from an "opinion writer," but I don't actually like voicing my opinions.

Let me explain. I almost never interject myself into discussions on controversial issues. I prefer not to openly take a stance on an issue that could raise eyebrows among my friends or peers. I may feel strongly on an issue and even say so among my close friends, but I almost never voice such on record – be it print or on social media.

The fear of unintentionally offending a friend or having a past statement be brought up later to my own derision keeps me quiet. Opinions are shaped by the experiences and people we encounter, molding how we view the world around us. My opinions, as a 24-year-old law student might change completely once I don the hat of a 40-something working mother. If I voice a strong opinion now, will I later have to eat my own words? How important is it to voice your own opinions? If you feel strongly should you not be able to be express it publicly? Is there a time and place for everything, including opinions? Should you carefully evaluate each statement for its appropriateness?

When I hear or read someone's opinion, even one that I disagree with, I often think, "Wow, I really admire you for having the courage to say that." On the contrary, I sometimes hear or read someone's opinion, even one that I agree with, and think, "Wow, I can't believe you actually said that." Why are some opinions okay but others not? This longwinded internal debate is probably why my last Facebook status was about selling BBQ tickets for my sorority, in 2008.

I'm sure you've formed a strong opinion of me for dragging out my non-conclusive conclusion on the subject, so I'll get to the point. "Pee or get off the pot" as my eloquent father always says.

Well here it goes; as far as an opinion on opinions, this opinion writer has yet to form one. Cheers!

Court orders quick reply in open-carry gun case

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Plaintiffs who want to block Mississippi's open-carry gun law won a quick order overturning it. Now they have to act quickly to save that order.

Presiding Supreme Justice Michael Randolph ordered Hinds County District Attorney Robert Shuler Smith and the other plaintiffs to answer by 5 p.m. Monday a request from Attorney General Jim Hood to throw out a lower court ruling.

Neither Smith nor his attorney Lisa Ross immediately answered phone messages Monday afternoon.

Hinds County Circuit Judge Winston Kidd ruled this past week that the law was vague, granting an injunction in an emergency hearing Friday to prevent irreparable harm.

Smith and others requested that the law be blocked. The law was to take effect Monday.

The law clarifies that people in Mississippi don't need any kind of state-issued permit to carry a gun that's not concealed.

The bill's main sponsor, Rep. Andy Gipson, R-Braxton, reiterated Monday that the law only clarifies the state constitution's existing right to bear arms.

"House Bill 2 is nothing new when it comes to your right, the citizens' rights, to keep and bear arms in Mississippi," Gipson said in a news conference at the state Capitol. "That's been the law of the land in Mississippi not since July 1, but since 1890 and even earlier."

Some sheriffs and police chiefs, however, have said they fear people could become trigger-happy and hurt civilians or law enforcement officers. Gipson said police chiefs and sheriffs needed to accept the changes, saying Kidd's ruling was "judicial activism" that overstepped his powers and that the lawsuit was an attempt to criminalize guns.

"A right unexercised is a right lost and what we've seen over the last few weeks is a rediscovery of the right to bear arms in Mississippi," Gipson said.

In his appeal, Hood argues the state judge's ruling violates the right to bear arms and the Legislature's right to regulate concealed weapons.

Hood said the plaintiffs in the case made no allegation or argument that the law is unconstitutional. Instead, he argues they only offered some vague policy statements, "none of which represent a legal sufficient basis for the judiciary to overturn the will and judgment of the Legislature."

Hood said the plaintiffs waited 116 days between the time the law was signed by the governor and the date it was take effect to file a complaint. Hood said his office had effectively been ambushed, receiving only 30 minutes to review the complaint before the hearing before the state judge.

Hood had issued a non-binding legal opinion June 13 saying guns would still be banned on school and college campuses, and that law-enforcement officers could ban the open carry of guns in courthouses and other public buildings. Hood also said people would still be able to ban weapons on private property.

Gipson said he had worked with Hood, a Democrat, to draft the appeal over the weekend.

"When Jim Hood and Andy Gipson agree on something, you know something is up," Gipson said. Republicans in 2012 trimmed Hood's powers to hire outside lawyers in an effort that carried heavy partisan overtones.

Though Kidd set a July 8 hearing on the matter, Gipson said he hoped the Supreme Court would wipe away Kidd's ruling before that hearing.

Along with winning the national convention, fraternity member Abdul Hamid had the highest overall GPA of all the fraternity's chapters across the nation.

Winning the national convention is among the top accomplishments for the Epsilon Omega Chapter according to Isom.

"We have had some notable accomplishments, but this is definitely among the best," he said. "And for us to win this in our chapter's 35th anniversary, it's even more special."

REVIEW

'Hello, Dolly!' performance filled with beauty, grace and spunk

BY ALEX GRYDER
ajgryder@go.olemiss.edu

For the 10th Anniversary of the Shakespeare Festival, Oxford put on a crowd-pleasing performance of "Hello, Dolly!" in the Main Hall of the Ford Center on Thursday, June 27.

Based on Thornton Wilder's "The Matchmaker," "Hello, Dolly!" is one of the most popular musicals on Broadway.

Mary Donnelly Haskell plays Dolly Levi. She brought not only a powerful voice to the stage, but also a great sense of timing for delivering comedic lines. Dolly Levi is known for her love of life and meddling with the lives of others, and Haskell played her part perfectly. She seemed extremely comfortable in the role she was playing, as though she was born to be Dolly. Haskell's own sense of humor came out in the role, and, as an audience member, I could tell she was amused with the idea of meddling with her fellow cast members on the stage. I had not expected to fall in love with the character of Dolly, but Haskell seemed so fun and full of life that I could not resist.

JARED BURLESON | The Daily Mississippian

Horace Vandergelder struggles with his feelings about Dolly throughout the production and at the end of the show he proposes.

Written by five-time Tony Award winner Jerry Herman, the play follows Mrs. Dolly Gallagher Levi, a matchmaker extraordinaire, as she sets off on a quest to make sure all the people in her town of Yonkers find love.

Dolly herself has set her sights on Horace Vandergelder (Ed Hanson) the well-known half-a-millionaire. She plans on taking him as her own husband to spread his wealth throughout the lives of others.

Director of the play Rene E. Pulliam has brought to the stage a caring, witty, and confident Dolly Levi.

The play begins with a slow build up from the orchestra, conducted by Robert Aubrey, into the opening of Act One. The townspeople of Yonkers fill the stage in their stunning la belle epoque attire. The cast becomes intimate with the audience by sharing their fond thoughts of Dolly. The act brings both music and dialogue to the stage which introduces a whole new level of involvement between the audience and characters. Dolly is then wheeled onto the stage and smiled upon as she begins to pair up the single men and women with one another, whereafter she "shoos" them from her advisory.

Ed Hanson plays Dolly's love interest, Horace Vandergelder. Vandergelder is known for his ill-humored response to life and Hanson certainly played his part well. I was not expecting to dislike Vandergelder as much as I did. Though the part was played well, it seemed odd that someone so loving and caring as Dolly could ever fall for a man of his like. Hanson helped win me over by the end of the last act; however, it took convincing.

I was pleasantly surprised by Vandergelder's clerks, Cornelius Hackl (Garrett Lawson) and Barnaby Tucker (Kyle Davis) who filled the audience with humor and life. The duo were so full of hopes and dreams for their futures that one could not help but fall in love with them. Their witty banter and innocent nature almost stole the show for me. They were so well cast that I couldn't imagine them in any other state.

Though all the cast members of the play filled the auditorium with beautiful voices, Mary Haskell's stood out the most. She performed every song with beauty, grace and a bit of spunk, and it was lovely to listen to her throughout the night.

I fell in love with the characters and storyline of "Hello, Dolly!" and very much enjoyed my Thursday night.

Position breakdown: Defensive Line

The Daily Mississippian's David Collier breaks down the Ole Miss defensive line in part five of an eight-part series that will break down each position of the Rebels' 2013 football team.

As football season approaches, everyone is predicting how many wins their team will get. For Ole Miss, there is little doubt they will put points on the board with head coach Hugh Freeze running the show, but how will they be defensively?

The Rebels have a lot of talent on that side of the ball, especially with the incoming freshmen that will likely be asked to make big contributions in year one.

But what could push the rest of the defense to the next level? The defensive line. There are question marks at both defensive end and tackle, but there is also a lot of potential.

At end, Ole Miss is led by junior C.J. Johnson, who had a big year in 2012, totaling 55 total tackles, 12 tackles for loss and 7.5 sacks. The Philadelphia, Miss., native is poised for an even bigger junior campaign, but an ankle injury that he suffered in spring practice could slow him down early on. He should be ready to go for the start of fall camp, but with ankles, you just never know.

Senior Cameron Whigham is the next returning player at defensive end. Last year, Whigham started in 11 games and had 27 total tackles and 1.5 sacks. He's not the flashiest player, but he gets the job done.

This fall, a lot of eyes will be on sophomore defensive end Channing Ward to see what kind of progression he has made. Ward, who had 21 tackles as a freshman, was at a disadvantage last season after getting cleared from the NCAA clearinghouse just a week before the season opener. However, he showed a lot of athletic ability and seemed to make more of an impact at the back end of the season. Year two in the system should mean he will play faster and make the impact everyone has been waiting for.

The Rebels will also be anxious to see how big of a contribution freshman Robert Nkemdiche will make at end. The consensus No. 1 overall recruit was the headliner of Ole Miss' big recruiting class in February, but now he will have to prove his rating on the field.

Junior defensive end Carlos Thompson will also look to get into the rotation after redshirting in 2012. Thompson has yet to live up to the hype that surrounded him coming out of high school, but a year to focus on getting bigger could prove to be the difference.

Senior D.T. Shackelford and redshirt freshman Temario Strong are two linebackers that could slide down to defensive end for a few snaps. Shackelford is coming off two ACL surgeries that held him out of action the past two seasons.

At defensive tackle, the Rebels will be forced to replace some big bodies, but the top returner is sophomore Issac Gross. The South Panola product was a force in his first year in Oxford, racking up 40 tackles, 10 tackles for loss and 2.5 sacks.

Ole Miss will also look for junior college transfer Lavon Hooks to play himself into the starting lineup early on at defensive tackle. Hooks was the among one of the top junior college players last season, tallying 51 total tackles, 20.5 tackles for loss and 9.5 sacks last year at Northeast Mississippi Community College.

Juniors Bryon Bennett and Carlton Martin as well as sophomore Woodrow Hamilton will also be in the defensive tackle rotation.

Analysis
The defensive line is filled with talent, but their success will rely on their ability to stay healthy. It's not as deep of a unit as the Rebel coaching staff would like, but it has the ability to be very good.

Last season, Ole Miss finished the year fourth in the nation in tackles for loss (7.92 per game) and 11th in sacks (2.92 per game). Those numbers should rise with the returning talent.

They lost a lot inside with Gilbert Pena and Uriah Grant graduating, but Hooks should be able to contribute in a big way this year. Also, Gross could be ready to have a breakout year after spending an entire offseason in the weight and conditioning program. Add some more weight to that quick first step he has, and that is a scary combination for any offensive lineman to deal with.

Johnson's ankle shouldn't give him problems, and teams won't be able to double-team him if Ward and Nkemdiche can be the playmakers they are expected to be. If those two guys have the light bulb go on early, this defensive line will give opponents all they can handle.

It may take a few games into the season to see exactly how good this unit can be, but with a young secondary, I see them carrying the Rebel defense to their second-straight winning season.
