Wonderful Year In 4-H Work For Kent McCuiston He Says

By Kent McCuiston

This year has been a wonderful experience for me in my 4-H work. I have spent many enjoyable hours working with my projects. I have carried three projects in this year's work which included: dairying, tractor maintenance and hogs. I have been selected County Champion in Achievement in Dairying, and Tractor Maintenance.

I also had hopes of a project and won three blue ribbons with them at the Hog Show and Sale in March. In the spring I also participated in speech and demonstrations. At the County Rally I gave an electrical demonstration on "Proper Lighting for Your Study Center." I won first place with my demonstration at the County Rally and first place champion at the District Rally held in Carlisle County. I made 2 pin-up lamps and a portable desk. I also received red ribbons on the lamps at the County Fair and first place in boys crafts.

Learns About Tractor In 4-H Club Project

By Nelson Murdock

I have been enrolled in the 4-H Tractor Maintenance Project for the past five years and I am still learning many valuable lessons in tractor maintenance. This has been very interesting and helpful to me since I help my dad to operate the farm. I am responsible for the care and lubrication of the tractor while operating it. The lessons we have learned in lubrication, changing oil and oil-filters and how important these things are to the smooth operation of the tractor have been a big help to me. I love to operate a tractor and care for it. Did you realize that a tractor breathes and needs fresh air?

We have learned many valuable safety rules and have been taught the danger in not practicing these rules. We are very much interested in cutting down on farm accidents. This can be done by practicing these safety rules. We have enjoyed the hospitality of all the Tractor Dealers in our county. Our meetings were held alternately at the dealers business establishments and we have seen all these fine tractors used in demonstration our lessons.

Dear Abby . . .

She's Young At Heart!

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What does a man do when he confirms his suspicions that his mother-in-law wants to be more than a mother-in-law to him, if you know what I mean?

My wife and I have been married (temporarily for some years) and have two children. I am 37, my wife is 34, and her mother is 56. She certainly doesn't look like the type who would entertain the kind of ideas she has been trying to get across to me lately. My father-in-law is a nice, easy-going, understated person. At family get-togethers, she sends him home early so she can ride home with my wife and me to drop the wife off and then drive our sister home. Then she insists to get away from my mother-in-law is on! How do I get out of predicaments like this?

CHASED BUT CHASTE
DEAR CHASED: Tell Grandma WOLF and if she doesn't behave herself you will be forced to skip the family get-togethers. And then her daughter will wonder why. That should do it. If it doesn't, you are the first 37-year-old man who can't run faster than a 56-year-old woman.

DEAR ABBY: A very good-looking girl who goes steady with my best buddy sent word to me through her girl friend that she would like to go out with me. To tell you the truth, I think I could go for her, but I don't want to ask her out while she is my buddy's steady girl. I'm afraid if I give her enough encouragement, she'll break up with him and then what if, after a few dates with her, I decide I don't like her that much? How can this be worked? I have never had a steady girl and I don't think I want one.

UNDECIDED
DEAR UNDECIDED: This girl apparently has a roving eye. If she were the right kind of girl, she'd break off with her steady and be legitimately free to date others, because obviously that is what she wants to do. But don't give her an encouragement while she is going steady with somebody else.

DEAR ABBY: An uncle of mine bought our 14-year-old son an electric guitar for his birthday. Harvey has been taking piano lessons for two years, but since he got this guitar he seems to have lost all interest in the piano and he spends all his time fooling around with the guitar. We have a lot of money invested in piano lessons, but Harvey is begging us to let him give up the piano and take guitar. Should we let him? I could just stop

The YELLOW VILLA
By SUZANNE BLANC
From the novel published by Doubleday & Co., Inc. Copyright © 1964 by Suzanne Blanc. Distributed by King Features Syndicate.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED?
When Rita Reis' most glamorous days as movie star were past, she had moved to the balcony of her mid-western villa at Madison in the mountains. One day she realized they had remained La Reles' murder by a tall, blond man. Terrified the workmen ran for their lives.

CHAPTER 5
The commandant was disappointed. The Reles murder was not, as the police chief had confidently predicted, apprehended within the hour. Almost immediately after the workmen reported the murder, a taxi driver was found at the Supreme Hotel who had picked up a fare answering the description of the killer. It had seemed then as if the case, barely opened, was already closed. But the trail ended abruptly at the bus depot. None of the cashiers remembered seeing the tall blond man a ticket. The commandant was certain, and Inspector Menendez agreed, that La Reles' murder was still hot in the city.

The investigation moved on to the villa, the commandant and his assistants leading the way in a black official limousine. The inspector following discreetly in his own small gray sedan. The inspector was well aware that his presence would be tolerated only on the perimeter of the investigation, only if he did not interfere. As unobtrusively as possible the massive dark man padded around after the police, observing everything, permitting himself to say nothing.

At the villa La Reles' body had been removed. Like part of a magnificent arrangement stage set, the yellow house crouched secretly under an incandescent sun.

Had the inspector been in charge he would have questioned the workmen more carefully. But Menendez reminded himself, he was not in charge. And the questioning, he admitted, was a minor point to criticize in the over-all excellence of the police work.

Automatically, as soon as the details of the murder were received, a description of the man had been broadcast, the borders informed, the bus lines, trains, air terminals, all alerted. Patrolmen were warned to watch the streets for the killer; hotels notified that he might try to register.

The police chief over-looked no possible avenue of escape. Menendez conceded that, apart from the weakness he found in the questioning, he could have done no better. The commandant's brusque, curt approach to the witness disturbed him, however. It seemed to him that although the workmen had been eager to talk, they had been asked too little, and again, in the actress's living room, that her frightened maid had been badgered too much.

With Rita's father, even the chief himself must have realized that his military manner had failed completely. With sympathy, perhaps, the commandant might have been able to reach him; on the other hand, whatever approach had been used might have failed. Senor Reles was so consumed with hatred that he could talk only of avenging her death.

"I'll find him and kill him myself," the gray-faced old peasant said wistfully over and over again. But no one really took the talk of vengeance seriously. It would take him time to get over his daughter's death. But, stubborn as he was, Rita's father did reveal a vital bit of information, the murderer's name, and when the commandant relayed that back to the police station, the inspector was forced, once more, to admire the chief's competence and caution.

"He's been calling himself Steve Welden, that's probably his name," the commandant said into the phone. "Check with immigration on his entry permit. He'd be a fool to use it now but add it as a possibility on all outgoing reports."

EXACTLY what I would have said, the inspector thought approvingly. His criticism of the questioning was really unjustified. Still, had he been in charge, there were questions the inspector would have asked the workmen about her death, would have asked her father about her life. Maybe they were not germane to the case. Maybe they sprang from his personal, intensive interest in the actress. Nevertheless, had he been authorized to do so, he would have asked them. The physical circumstances of the crime were apparent, but the emotional atmosphere in which it was committed, the underlying causation, was locked within the murderer, conditioned, possibly even created, by Rita herself.

As the inspector wandered through her house, some of the murdered woman's curious contradictions unfolded. His magnified image of her shrank, softened. She ceased to be distantly magnificent, totally unreal, became a woman with strengths and faults who lived.

halfback has been a regular for the past three years and serves the Purples also as a place kicker and punter.

Murray is relying on Charlie Warren for their kicking. Coach Holland says Warren is "second to none in the conference in punting and his fine work has helped the Tigers immensely."

The Tigers coaches were especially pleased with the improved Tiger defense in the Fulton game, as well as their offensive play.

The defense continues to improve says Coach Holland, "but they will have a big job to do to stop the Bowling Green offense on Friday."

Coach Holland added that "the boys believe they can do it."

Seats for 2000 fans will be available for the game Friday night.
