Two Fughettas

These two fughettas utilize traditional common-practice counterpoint, but the subjects feature syncopated rhythms atypical of the baroque style. The result is a baroque sound with a distinctly modern flavor.

Scenes

This suite for percussion ensemble was written with the help of Visic, an online open-source program that converts gaze-tracking data into music. The program keeps track of where the user's eyes fall while looking at an image on the screen, then maps this data to note pitch and duration. While attempting to preserve the integrity of the program's original output for each image used, instrumentation and musical structure was chosen to reflect the content of each image.

Gabriel's Oboe

Renowned for writing the music of classic Western films of the 1960s such as The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly and Once Upon a Time in the West, Ennio Morricone has scored hundreds of films over a career spanning more than sixty years. The much-beloved main theme of his acclaimed score for the 1986 film The Mission, "Gabriel's Oboe" frequently appears in concert programs worldwide and has been arranged for instruments and ensembles of all kinds. An arrangement for cello was recorded by Yo-Yo Ma in collaboration with Morricone in 2004.

Fratres

According to the online Bachtrack database, Estonian composer Arvo Pärt is today's most frequently performed living composer. Fratres is based on Pärt's signature technique of tinntinnabuli (from the Latin for bell), which entails a well-organized relationship between a melodic line and a continuously articulated triad. Originally published in 1977 for violin and piano, Fratres has also been arranged for cello and a wide array of solo instruments and ensembles. Along with other key Pärt compositions from the 1970s, Fratres has been featured in dozens of movie and documentary soundtracks for the powerful atmosphere of stillness and mysticism it invokes.

Cello Concerto in C

Erich Wolfgang Korngold was a remarkably gifted child prodigy, composing fully mature works in the complex late-Romantic style by his early teens; his first ballet was staged at age 11 and his first opera was staged at age 19. After a highly successful career in Vienna through the '20s and '30s, Korngold was forced to emigrate to the United States during World War II. Settling in Hollywood, he wrote groundbreaking scores for Warner Bros. films and contributed significantly to the art of film composing. His Cello Concerto is the musical centerpiece of Deception (1946), one of the last films he scored for Warner Bros. Not only is music from the concerto featured in the underscoring, the work functions as a key plot device and is given an in-film performance during the final scenes.

Special thanks to...

Dr. John Marshall for his critical mentorship and support over the years

Dr. Bill Conable for helping me to find freedom and ease of movement

Dr. Randel Wagner and Susan Windham for helping me to develop my voice

Dr. Jonathan Middleton and Dr. Don Goodwin for their inspiring guidance in composition

... and most importantly, my mom, without whose constant support I could never have made it so far!
