Title: Ignite that Spark into a Flame: Strategies for Increasing Research and Scholarship Productivity

Time: 50 minutes

Objectives

1. to engage in an interactive session to further ignite research and scholarship passion
2. to identify opportunities for research, grants, presentation, and publication
3. to address challenges that pose barriers to research and knowledge mobilization
4. to develop viable goals and action plans

Content Outline

1. Introductions – name, department/program, areas of specialization in terms of teaching and research, and what they'd like to “take-away” from this session (intro prompts/questions will depend on how many are in attendance)
2. Brief Overview: What comes up for you when you hear the terms “research” and “scholarship”?
3. Share my own personal stories regarding navigating different institutions and expectations as well as making time for research and scholarship
4. Individual Quick-Write: What are potential opportunities for research and grants in your current context? Highlight individual and collective research as well as scholarship of teaching and laboratory experiences (e.g., simulation and clinical). Ask 3-5 attendees to share.

5. Follow-up Question: Where can you present and publish your research? Consider target audience, type of writing, and making the most out of the research.
6. Think-Peer-Share: What are some of the challenges that you have faced or may face as you increase your research and scholarship productivity? What resources are in place or that need to be in place in order to enhance your productivity? Ask 3-5 attendees to share.
7. Follow-up Question: How can college and university administrators support this work?
8. Individual Quick-Write: For this academic year, what viable goals do you have for research and scholarship (including grants, presentations, and publications)? Ask 3-5 attendees to share.
9. Closing: What additional workshops and colloquia would be needed as you move forward with increasing research and scholarship productivity?
