Native of Hungary Stresses God's Way In Plea for Peace

Phoenixville Pastor Cites Need For New Way of Life

"Before peace comes, we must start on an entirely new way — God's way," said the Reverend Imre pastor of Phoenixville Kovacs, Evangelical and Reformed Church, who spoke at vespers last evening.

Born in Hungary, where he received his early education, the Rev. Kovacs came to this country as a young man and was graduated from Franklin and Marshall Theological School. In 1936 he returned to Europe and studied conditions among the people there. Thus he spoke last evening from a first hand knowledge of the attitudes of Europeans toward one another. Kovacs did not speak as a pessimist, however, as he went on to say that the people of America have proved that there can be a certain social security, and that they can live together. This knowledge they must carry back to Europe.

Young People Should Be Envied

"The young people of America should not be pitied, but envied, because they have the opportunity to carry the ways of God to all the world," he stated.

Rev. Kovacs sang "The Hymn of Hungary" in the Hungarian language. He said that the song was inspired by the enslavement of 96 Christian ministers in Austria after they refused to give up their religious beliefs. The men were forced to act as galley slaves, until all but 14 died. None, however, revoked his religion.

Profs To Speak On Historic And Economic Stakes

Professor Harvey L. Carter and Maurice O. Bone will lay the groundwork for this year's forums when they speak on the historic and economic stakes of the war on Wednesday evening at 8 p. m.

The Forum Committee has announced that the forums this year will deal entirely with the problem of post-war reconstruction. In order to best cover the field, the committee decided that Historian Carter and Economist Bone could best set the stage for future speakers by explaining some of the major factors responsible for the war.

It is planned that other speakers will be drawn in part from the faculty of the College and in part from noted lecturers and authorities. There will be six programs throughout the semester, planned to present a new phase of the problem.

Both Speakers From Middle West

Dr. Carter is from the Middle West, a graduate of Wabash College, Illinois. He is a Roosevelt champion in both domestic and foreign issues. He has spent considerable time in studying the effect of history on current events, both at home and abroad.

DEDICATE ONE MINUTE

Tonight the Y's will innaugurate something new for the College and the town. At 9:00 p.m. tonight the College bell will be rung in honor of Ursinus men in the service. At that time everyone is asked to stop for just a minute and think of what those men are doing for you.

If you're so inclined, say a prayer. It's to be a nightly custom and a minute each evening devoted to thinking of someone else whose doing something for you will be a worthy experience in religious living.

* * * * 41 TO 0

Whatever anyone says about Saturday's football game only echoes the fact that we're back where we've been before.

It wasn't any fun to watch Muhlenberg's second and third string roll up points as they did, but its something Ursinus has been seeing for too many years. It was that same old spirit—no pep, no push, no blocking, no team play.

But stay behind the team, for unless you're on the squad, you don't have any room to gripe.

JOIN! JOIN! JOIN?

At the beginning of the academic year, President McClure made this statement in his address to the student body at the opening chapel service:

"We cannot know at present how long any student enlisted in the enlisted reserve corps will be permitted to remain in college. Certainly a student in the enlisted reserve corps in any brach of the service will be permitted to continue his studies at least as long as he would if he had remained under the jurisdiction of the Selective Service System. . .

"Be assured that, whatever your status may be, your College will keep you informed of all official announcements that concern your welfare and your future, and will help you in every possible way."

In this way Dr. McClure gave advice and assurance to the men of the College. He advised them to join the reserves, and he assured them that any information which Washington made public would be passed on to them.

What he said then is true today. All college men would be wise to join the reserves. Maybe what the Army, Navy, and Marines said about voluntary enlistments being stopped in a short while is true. But it's an old story that has been kicking around since Pearl Harbor. It shouldn't be used as a "come-on" gag.

In spite of the fact that the College will keep its men informed, and do what it can to keep them in school — and no matter what you think of the reserve's high pressure salesmanship, these Army, Navy, and Marine units do offer the college man his best chance.

WHAT IS YOUR DECISION?

In these days when the United Nations are doing their utmost to bring a quick decision to the present conflict, one of the most questionable points which stand out in the diplomatic relations of the United States concerns our relations with the Vichy government of France.

Should we not break off diplomatic relations with the Vichy government in France in the interest of consistency and expediency? Are there any of the abhorrent attributes of the Nazi government that we could not assign with equal justice to the Vichy government? It has epposed the cause of the United Nations in every possible way, stopping short only of actual hostilities. Concessions have been made to our demands only when there seemed to be no alternative open to the collaborationists, who could not risk an open break on their own account without losing the last semblance of support from the French people. This is in direct contrast to the spirit of the French government and people during the dark days when such desperate offers as Anglo-French union were seriously considered.

The Vichy government at this moment has reached its lowest ebb of popularity, not only with the Nazi officials but with the French people. In the first case it has failed to supply the laborers promised in compliance with the demands of the Nazis, and in the second case because it has entered into an agreement to sell Frenchmen into virtual slavery. Would this not, then, be the strategic moment at which to strike the death blow?

There was an argument in the early days of Vichy's existence that we dare not sever our relations lest we drive them straight into the arms of the Berlin government. Could we drive Laval and his associates any further now that they have carried themselves to the very brink of a declaration of war on the former allies of the French people? This is an act which would have appeared on their program sooner had there not been the iron clad obstinacy of the French people to consider — an obstinacy affected little by reprisals and mass executions except to strengthen the determination to triumph in the final trial.

I have said nothing concerning the reasons why it is still desirable - in fact, a paramount necessity in the eyes of our state department officials — to maintain the relations with Vichy. Were we to sever our relations it would mean that we would no longer be able to exercise any kind of pressure upon the collaborationists short of declaring war. This would alienate the French people, whom we have solemnly pledged to aid in their struggle. Though direct hostilities might be expedient, human nature could not be expected to appreciate aid which would inflict further hardship and suffering upon them. This may be noted in the general feeling of resentment and disapproval of the first British bombing of the industrial plants in the suburbs of Paris last spring, though its expediency could hardly be denied.

These are only a few of the major points of this currently important argument. The arguments presented in each case were not meant to be exhaustive but rather to stir up a debate in each reader's mind, which in turn would resolve itself into a firm decision. It is on such questions as these that students of today and tomorrow will have to form opinions.

After moping around for half the afternoon waiting for an idea to reveal itself (we have them every now and then), we discovered in our thought ramblings, that quarter exams are just around the corner! Yours truly received quite a shock at the mere thought, and immediately pounced upon the idea of a crusade against cramming (it happens once a year, come Hitler or Hirohito). We must admit, however, the purpose is to convince ourselves of the folly of cramming as well as you.

When you get right down to the facts, we students waste a great deal of time in unessential extracurricular activities. What with conserving rubber, gasoline, food, clothing, and all the rest, maybe it might be a good idea to think about conserving a little of our time. As my colleague has noted previously in her column, bull sessions probably result in the greatest loss of time. Card playing probably ranks next, and after that any number of occupations serve to keep us away from the books. Meanwhile, of course, the backlog of work piles up; the time of reckoning arrives and the books, wrenched from their heretofore stationary post, receive a dusting. (We've dirtied a lot of dust rags that way.)

The process reminds us remotely of the Jap 'water cure'. After experiencing it, the victim has a distinct aversion to water for some time. And after the victim of procrastination (all of us) has practically rammed hundreds of facts into his head, he feels in dire need of a prolonged vacation. The result is that the person finds that after vacationing a month or so, his folly lands him in the same predicament—he's so far behind that he must cram again.

We are bound to admit that these forms of innocent diversion have their virtues. The bull session teaches you never to hope to change the other fellow's viewpoint. Card playing affords relaxation in diverting the mind to the solving of a problem. The other diversionary movements no doubt all have their virtues. By analogy, though: sugar is necessary to the diet, but in excess it causes diabetes.

Thus the long and short of it may be summed up in one worddiscrimination. If we could only get the idea that the proper proportion of extra-curricular activities, mixed with the proper proportion of study, yields the great-est satisfaction! A satisfaction which we derive from the knowledge of a job well done in studies, and an appreciation of the liberties we allow ourselves—that goes far beyond the pleasures we get from pure horseplay. We are talk-ing of ideals, of course, but to our way of thinking, a few ideals are not amiss anywhere. We are fighting all over the world for a bigger ideal now. It might be well to work on this ideal and move up to bigger and better things. Who can ered by the same malady in striving to remain awake long enough to attend.

The bleary-eyed student that gropes his way toward Bomberger at 7:29 a.m. on a foggy morning is, no doubt, headed for the 7:30 a. m. to 9:00 a. m. meeting of the methods course in the teaching of social studies. English group students fare no better. It is they who slump dejectedly into their chairs at dinner and sullenly retain their tacturnity throughout the meal with the exception of ut-tering the brief statement, "Praise the Lord, and pass the Pricenutrition!". That 4:00 p. m. to 6:00 p. m. methods course in English is over for another week. You know, we were almost locked in the building.

Blankety Blanks

All practice teachers at Ursinus must obtain one hundred and eighty hours of classroom experience, including both observation and actual teaching. For each of these hours, a blank, sometimes more, must be properly filled in er and handed to the proper authority. All blanks are provided by the ministerial studies at Drew Theo-College free of charge, but, to handle this voluminous clerical work, the College does not include cute secretaries

In filling out each observation report, the practice teacher must struggle with such things as pupils' responses and attitudes, general aim, specific aim, approach, organization of material, motivation, subject material, teacher's techniques, sensory-motor learning, associative learning, learning, problem solving, appreciation and attitudes, individual social development, and so on into the night. When it comes to actual teaching, a copy of the lesson plans for each class period is required by the College and by the

An Apple for the Teacher

While spending an average of fifteen hours a week at the school to which the College has assigned him, the student teacher is considered as a member of its faculty, sharing its regulations, also its tribulations. During the time the student is actually engaged in teaching, he is observed in action by his training teacher, a professor from the department of education at Ursinus, and perhaps, by the principal of the school. It is at these times, when the classroom door swings open to admit a critical observer, that the practice teacher must remove the chewing gum from his mouth, and put it where it will probably do more good between his knees.

These are the times that try men's souls, when student teachers wonder if after their first class the pupils will give them an apple, or just plain "raspberries".

The Sixty-four Dollar Questions

What the pupils think of their practice teachers is easy to deermine—just question the kiddies. What the practice teachers think of their pupils, however, it is practically impossible to discover. Teachers' ethics, again, is the powdiscover. erful limiting factor. To pry from the teacher his classroom secrets is more difficult than to keep out of the draft, and that, friends, is impossible.

The Weekly, however, despite all ethics and restrictions, has made one great discovery. At long last we have discovered what causes teachers' hair to turn grey. The answer: fear of being called upon to answer the sixty-four dollar questions. An example? Sure. Is artificial the opposite of beneficial? Is a blackmail case one involving a Negro? You spell necking n-e-k-i-n-g. Is that right? Not the right spelling, but — hey, these kids want to know too much.

Give War Calls

TELEPHONE lines are crowded with calls—and many of them are vitally important to the armed forces, the government and war industries.

To give war calls a clear track and full speed ahead, adopt these telephone tactics for the duration:

- l. Don't make any unnecessary calls.
- 2. Keep all calls as brief as you can.
- 3. If you must use Long Distance, make your calls on Sunday, if possible -or after 9 P. M. at night.
