THE JEFFERSON FAMILY

by F. B. Lambert
Barboursville, W. Va.

It was a family tradition that the first of the Jeffersons came from Wales, but who was the original ancestor of this particular family is not known definitely. A Thomas Jefferson was living in Henrico County, Virginia, in 1677. He married Mary Brauch. They had a son Thomas Jefferson who married Mary Field. They lived in Chesterfield County, where, on February 29, 1707/8, Peter Jefferson, father of Thomas Jefferson, the President, was born. The family was not wealthy. Peter Jefferson became a surveyor, removed to Goodiland County, where he became a magistrate in 1731., purchased land and made his home in 1735. He married Jane Randolph, first cousin of William Randolph of "Tuckahoe" from whom he purchased 400 acres of land for a bowl of punch.

She was a daughter of Isham Randolph of "Dungeness" and his wife Jane Rogers. This connected the Jefferson family with one of the most distinguished families of Virginia, and assured its social standing.

Peter and Jane Jefferson had two sons and eight daughters. He died August 17, 1757, leaving eight of his children, two having preceded him in death. Thomas Jefferson, one of the sons, became President of the United States and the other one, Randolph Jefferson is said to have been the father of Henry Jefferson, who came to Cabell County.

This, however, is not true. However, it is a moral certainty that Henry Jefferson, Sr. was a desendant of some member of this family, for any one who ever saw Wash or Henry Jefferson of Nine Mile Creek, would never doubt it. There was a very striking resemblance to Thomas Jefferson, the President.

In 1942, there was published an interesting booklet by the McGregor Library of the University of Virginia. This booklet gave twenty-eight letters exchanged between Thomas Jefferson and his unknown brother, Randolph Jefferson from 1807-1815.

This booklet throws much light on the two brothers and, from it, I copy the following:

Jefferson's Unknown Brother

"Randolph Jefferson was the only brother of Thomas Jefferson, and that fact alone gives him significance. Few biographers of Jefferson have even mentioned his existence. No account of him, however brief, has ever been attempted, and no letters of his have before been published. The correspondence from the Carr-Cary Papers here made available throws considerable light upon this unknown brother of Thomas Jefferson. It comprises all the letters known to have been exchanged between the two men during the years 1807-1815, and for these years gives a fairly complete picture of the relations which existed between Thomas and his brother and neighbor, whose plantation of Snowden was but twenty miles from Monticello. The letters treat of family and agricultural matters, and in some degree enlarge one's knowledge of Jefferson's domestic life. But they are primarily interesting because they reveal Thomas Jefferson's affection, patient kindness, and desire to help a brother strikingly his inferior.

"Randolph, born at Shadwell on October 1, 1755, was twelve years younger than Thomas. With his twin sister, Anna Scott, he was the last of the ten children (including two sons who had died in infancy) of Peter Jefferson and his wife, Jane Randolph. He was two years old, and Thomas was fourteen, when his father died in 1757. By the terms of Peter Jefferson's will Thomas was to have his choice of either the estates on the Fluvanna River (the south fork of the James) or the estates on the Rivanna River, and Randolph was to have the estates not chosen by Thomas. The estates on the Fluvanna, really the James River proper, fell to Randolph. These were extensive and profitable. There was the Fine Creek property and lands adjacent along the James just above Richmond, some land in Lunenburg County, Angola, Guinea, and Wingo's in Cumberland County, and four acres with the tavern and outbuildings at the ferry landing on the south side of the James opposite Scott's Ferry, not Scottsville. Most important of all was the Snowden estate of 1,327 fertile acres in Buckingham County, adjacent to the ferry-landing tract, with its plantation house perched high on a bluff overlooking the great bend in the James River.

"The younger son was well provided for by his father, and his education was not neglected by John Harvie, the principal executor of Peter Jefferson's estate. While Thomas was being boarded and schooled by the Reverend James Maury, the younger children were being instructed by a Mr. Benjamin Sneed. In the years 1764 and 1765 Mr. Sneed held school a few miles southeast of Shadwell at the Buck Island plantation of Charles Lewis, whose wife was a sister of Mrs. Peter Jefferson. During these years Harvie's account books show payments to Lewis for Master Randolph's boarding, and to Sneed for his schooling. Meanwhile Thomas went on to William and Mary College, studied law under George Wythe, and began the practice of law in 1767. In that year John Harvie died. Thenceforth Thomas with brotherly affection looked after Randolph's interests. When his brother was sixteen Thomas sent him on to William and Mary where he was in residence from October of 1771 until early in 1773.

"One of Randolph's teachers at William and Mary, who also seems to have been his special tutor, was the Reverend Thomas Gwatkin, professor of Natural philosophy and mathematics, a young man not long out of Jesus College, Oxford. An able teacher, Gwatkin in 1774 became the tutor of Lord Fincastle, eldest son of the Earl of Dunmore. Doubtless he found teaching Governor Dunmore's son much pleasanter, and more rewarding, than teaching the brother of Thomas Jefferson, then a radical member of the House of Burgesses from Albemarle. When Jefferson and others had the House appoint June 1, 1774, as a day of fasting out of sympathy for the patriots of Boston, Mr. Gwatkin begged off from preaching the Fast Day Sermon in Williamsburg because of "a disorder of the Breast". A year later his Loyalist opinions forced his return to England. Of Randolph's scholastic record under Mr. Gwatkin and his colleagues at William and Mary nothing is known. His letters, however, furnish strong evidence that he profited very little from educational opportunities not dissimilar to those afforded his studious and brilliant older brother.

"Nothing is known of his social life in the gay little Virginia capital, where Thomas as a student had been the dinner companion of Dr. William Small, George Wythe, and Francis Fauquier, and had held his own at Governor Fauquier's parties noted for their Attic wit and chamber music. An item in Jefferson's account book of May 3, 1774, reveals that Randolph took violin lessons from Francis Alberti, and suggests that in some degree he shared his brother's passion for music. This is but one of many brief financial items in Jefferson's account books concerning Randolph, his education, his lands, the sale of his tobacco crops, and varied business transactions, all of which indicate the deep interest Thomas took in his brother's affairs both before and after Randolph became of age in 1776.

"During the Revolution Randolph saw some service, presumably as a private, in General Thomas Nelson's corps of Virginia Light Dragoons. It is possible that he served also under Charles Lewis of Buck Island, who for a time was a colonel of the 14th Virginia Regiment. With Colonel Lewis, Thomas Jefferson and other determined patriots of Albemarle County, he subscribed to the special Oath of Allegiance to the Commonwealth of Virginia (the so-called "Albemarle Declaration of Independence") of April 21, 1779. During the British invasion of 1781, his plantation of Snowden furnished provisions for the Virginia troops, pasturage for cavalry horses, and Negro laborers who helped remove from Scott's Ferry military stores which were an objective of Colonel Banastre Tarleton. When the victory at Yorktown that fall brought an end to military alarms and excursions, Randolph settled down at Snowden on the James as a country squire whose life, in sharp contrast to that of his distinguished brother, was narrowly circumscribed physically and intellectually.

"He was twice married. On July 30, 1780, he married Anne Jefferson Lewis, the daughter of Colonel Charles Lewis of Buck Island. She was his first cousin, and the sister of Charles Lilburne Lewis, who in 1769 had married Randolph's aister Lucy. The Lewis and Jefferson families became even more closely connected later on when Thomas, the son of Randolph, married Mary Randolph, the daughter of Lucy Jefferson Lewis. By his first wife, who died sometime before 1808, Randolph had five sons: Thomas (named for his brother), Robert Lewis, Field, Isham Randolph, and James Lilburne; and a daughter, Anna Scott (named for his twin sister). His second wife was Mitchie B. Pryor, daughter of David Pryor of Buckingham County. He married her in 1808 or 1809, and by her had one son, John Jefferson. It was Randolph's children, rather than those of Thomas, who carried on the Jefferson family name. None of them ever attained prominence, although a grandson, Peter Field, the son of Randolph's son Thomas, as a country merchant made what the little town of Scottsville considered a large fortune.

"While Thomas Jefferson's brother took no part in politics, he was in 1794 commissioned a captain of militia in Buckingham County. Captain Jefferson, as he was commonly called, was a substantial planter. In the year 1782, in Buckingham alone, he was taxed for 30 slaves, 6 horses, 42 cattle, and 2,000 acres of land. In 1815, the year of his death, he still possessed in Buckingham 22 slaves, 6 horses, 25 cattle, and 1,827 acres of land. However, as intimated in the letters which follow, the total amount of land which he had received from his father had considerably diminished by 1815. For easy-going Randolph was a poor manager. From boyhood he was often in debt, and his second wife was an extravagant and determined woman who ran up large bills against him with the merchants of Warren and Scott's Ferry, across the James from Snowden. His last years were distressed, also, by friction between his second wife and his sons. The latter were highly incensed when their stepmother succeeded in having Randolph make a new will, which was greatly in her favor and to their detriment. In the opinion of Joseph C. Cabell, the second Mrs. Randolph Jefferson was "a Jade of genuine bottom."

"Immediately following Randolph's death, on August 7, 1815, at the age of sixty, his sons attempted to break the new will. In contesting it (unsuccessfully, it appears) they obtained a deposition from their uncle at Monticello, dated September 15, 1815. In it Jefferson stated that his brother Randolph, throughout his life, had always been in the habit of consulting him "in cases of importance respecting his interests." There had been one exception; he had not consulted him when he proposed marrying Mitchie B. Pryor. Jefferson went on to state, with particular reference to Randolph's widow but in words that applied generally, that his brother had never been a man skilled in the judicious management of his affairs, "and that in all the occasions of life a diffidence in his own opinions, an extreme facility and kindness of temper, and an easy pliancy to the wishes and urgency of others, made him very susceptible of influence from those who had any views upon him."

"The letters from the Carr-Cary Papers which are here printed reveal the striking intellectual disparity between the Sage of Monticello and the Squire of Snowden. From an early day Thomas of course was well aware of Randolph's limitations, as is indicated by the only letter written by him to his brother hitherto published (in Sarah N. Randolph's Domestic Life of Thomas Jefferson), dated January 11, 1789. From a Paris then on the eve of the French Revolution, Thomas wrote: 'The occurrences of this part of the globe are of a nature to interest you so little that I have never made them the subject of a letter to you... so I have not the less continued to entertain for you the same sincere affection, the same wishes for your health and that of your family, and almost an envy of your quiet and retirement.' The letters which follow are evidence not only that the interests, tastes, grammar and spelling of Thomas Jefferson's only brother were decidedly those of an earth-bound farmer but that Thomas Jefferson's relations with his brother were ever characterized by an affectionate solititude."

Sources On Randolph Jefferson

Peter Jefferson's children are listed in Henry S. Randall, The Life of Thomas Jefferson (3 vols., New York, 1858). I, 17; and his will is in the Albemarle County Courthouse, Will Book 2, pp. 32035. Information on his Fluvanna estates has been kindly furnished by Mr. Edgar C. Hickisch. A survey of Snowden made July 18, 1799, is in Surveror's Platt Book, 176201814, Buckingham County Courthouse; the court records of that county were destroyed by fire in 1869. There are photostatic copies at the University of Virginia of John Harvie's account books of 1757-1765 (original at the Huntington Library) and of 1759-1761 (original at the Massachusetts Historical Society); and of Jefferson's account books, the most pertinent of which are those for 1771-1772, 1774, 1776-1778 (originals at the Massachusetts Historical Society), and 1773 (original at the Library of Congress). A sketch of Rev. Thomas Gwatkin by E. Alfred Jones is in the William and Mary College Quarterly Historical Magazine, XXVI (Jan. , 1918), 221-231; and he is mentioned in the Journals of the House of Burgesses of Virginia, 1773-1776, edited by John Pendleton Kennedy (Richmond, 1905), pp. 124, 126. Randolph Jefferson is listed, without rank, in John H. Gwathmey, Historical Register of Virginians in the Revolution (Richmond, 1938) p. 415; and as a signer of the "Albemarle Declaration of Independence" in Rev. Edgar Woods, Albemarle County (Charlottesville, 1901), p. 367. This so-called Declaration of Independence was really an oath of allegiance to a new government. The text of the oath and a list of subscribers to it, a fuller list than that given by Woods, are in the manuscript Diary of Dr. George Gilmer, in the Virginia Historical Society. Randolph's claims for provisions, etc., furnished during the Revolution, and his militia commission of May 13, 1794, as well as the Buckingham Land and Personal Property tax books for 1782 and 1815, are in the Virginia State Library. Genealogical information, incomplete and sometimes conflicting, is given in the Virginia Magazine of History and Biography, VII, Jan., 1900 325-326 XIII (Oct., 1921) 499-500, and XXXVI (Jan., 1928), 74; Woods, Albemarle County pp. 237-238, and Merrow Egerton Sorley, Lewis of Warner Hall; The History of a Family (Columbia, Mo., 1935), pp. 345-350. The deposition of Thomas Jefferson of Sept. 15, 1815 and the draft of a will made by Randolph Jefferson on May 27, 1808 (which lists his five sons by his first wife, but does not mention his daughter Anna Scott), are in the Carr-Cary Papers. Joseph C. Cabell's characterization of the second Mrs. Randolph Jefferson is in a letter to General John H. Cocke of Brems, dated Sept. 13, 1815, in the Cabell Manuscripts on deposit at the University of Virginia.

THE CABELL COUNTY JEFFERSONS

Henry Jefferson Sr. was born in 1778, and died in 1872, at 94. He married Elizabeth Bushby, born 1785, but the date of her death is not known. They came here, with the Dundases, from Alexandria, Virginia, and settled on Wild Cat Creek near Barboursville, at or about where Osie Jefferson lived a few years ago.

September 1, 1821, he and his wife received deed for one hundred acres of land, "for and during the natural lives of Henry Jefferson and Elizabeth, his wife. This was really a lease, for which they were to pay one dollar, the first year, and twenty dollars, per year, thereafter. They stayed there many years, but later moved to a farm owned by his son Henry Jefferson, Jr., on Nine Mile Creek. In his later years, he moved to Seven Mile Creek, and lived with his daughter, America Jefferson and probably died at her home. He was a gunsmith. He, is said, to have served in the war of 1812.

Henry and Elizabeth Jefferson had a large family of eight daughters and four sons:

I-2 Amy Jefferson

Born 1807, died about 1914, at 107; married Ezekiel Reynolds (Zeke), December 17, 1829.
