ARKADELPHIA, Ark.—Ouachita Baptist University's Department of Theatre Arts will present its fall production, “Hay Fever,” beginning Wednesday, Nov. 4, at 7:30 p.m. in Verser Theatre. Performances will continue Nov. 5-7 at 7:30 p.m., with a matinee performance on Sunday, Nov. 8, at 2:30 p.m. Due to COVID-19, seating is limited to Ouachita students, faculty and staff, but a ticketed livestreaming option will be available at www.obu.edu/boxoffice.

Written by Noel Coward, “Hay Fever” is a three-act comedy set in 1920s London. The plot focuses on the self-centered Bliss family, whose eccentricity becomes apparent when each member invites a guest for the weekend. The outsiders' visit sheds lights on the Bliss' craziness, eventually driving the guests away.

Danielle Hall, a senior musical theatre major from Prairie Grove, Ark., plays the matriarch of the family, Judith Bliss, a former actress who longs to return to the stage.

“She loves a bit of drama,” Hall said. “Her whole character is found in her trying to make drama in her own life since she misses the stage so much.”

Paige Price, a senior musical theatre major from Plano, Texas, plays Judith’s daughter, Sorel. Price said she enjoys the show’s comedy-of-manners style.

“My favorite part of the process – besides just being lucky enough to do in-person theatre in these trying times – has probably been figuring out the dialect and finding the humor in the style of the show,” Price said.

For director Matthew Murry, Ouachita visiting assistant professor of theatre arts, he hopes the audience finds an escape in the show’s lighthearted nature.

“There’s going to be something about it that you find interesting or unique,” Murry said.

Eric Phillips, professor of theatre arts, serves as scenic and lighting designer, and Kelsey Looney, visiting assistant professor of theatre arts, serves as costume and makeup designer.

Kailee Morehart, a senior music major from Alexander, Ark., serves as assistant student lighting designer; Ashlynn Lockhart, a junior musical theatre major from Holiday Island, Ark., serves as stage manager; and Kinsey Potts, a junior musical theatre major from Wylie, Texas, serves as assistant stage manager.

Tickets are on sale at the OBU Box Office and www.obu.edu/boxoffice. Ouachita students receive one free ticket upon presentation of their student ID. For more information, contact the Box Office at (870) 245-5555 weekdays from 1-5 p.m.
