“Solid research, Sound advice”

SEO Amsterdam Economics carries out independent applied economic research on behalf of national and international clients – both public institutions and private sector clients. Our research aims to make a major contribution to the decision-making processes of our clients. Originally founded by, and still affiliated with, the University of Amsterdam, SEO Amsterdam Economics is now an independent research group but retains a strong academic component. Operating on a nonprofit basis, SEO continually invests in the intellectual capital of its staff by granting them time to pursue continuing education, publish in academic journals, and participate in academic networks and conferences. As a result, our staff is fully up to date on the latest economic theories and econometric techniques.

The African Studies Centre Leiden is the only multidisciplinary academic knowledge institute in the Netherlands devoted entirely to the study of Africa. It has an excellent library that is open to the general public. The ASCL is an interfaculty institute of Leiden University. www.ascleiden.nl.

1 Introduction

Migration Studies in Europe

With the exception of some early pioneers, migration research in Europe dates back to 1958, when in the United Kingdom centres like the Institute of Race Relations and journals such as Race & Class were founded, followed by the journals International Migration (in 1962), International Migration Review (in 1966), the Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies (in 1974), and the Journal of Ethnic and Racial Studies (in 1977). The Centre for Refugee Studies was founded in Oxford, UK in 1982, and became one of the leading think tanks. In Germany the Institute for Migration Research and Intercultural Studies (IMIS) started in Osnabruck in 1991 and in the Netherlands the Institute for Migration and Ethnic Studies (IMES) in Amsterdam, in 1994. Since then, migration research in Europe has been continuously increasing. This culminated in the establishment of the EU-funded network of excellence IMISCOE (International Migration, Integration and Social Cohesion) in 2004 which, on the initiative of Prof. Rinus Penninx from the University of Amsterdam, brought together 19 major European research institutions. IMISCOE has since grown into a network of 45 migration research institutes in Europe. Its annual conferences usually attract 400 to 600 participants. This is a reflection and acknowledgment of a process that began in Europe sixty years ago. Much of this rise has been spurred by the EU framework programmes, notably FP6 and FP7 from 2002 onwards. In addition, the expansion of international organisations, such as IOM (already started in 1951), OECD, UNHCR (created in 1950), ICMPD and ILO and the launch of their annual migration reports (SOPEMI in 1973, World Migration report in 2000) and their research reports all took off from the early 1970s and were well established by the beginning of the 2000s. This is further enhanced by the emergence of think tanks and NGOs, such as the Centre for European Policy Studies (CEPS), the European Policy Centre, the Migration Policy Group, (MPG), the European Council on Refugees and Exiles (ECRE) and the Platform for International Cooperation on Undocumented Migrants (PICUM), all set up in the early 2000s.

This development was driven by the end of the bipolar cold war world order, the fall of the 'Iron Curtain' and in particular the increase of forced migration and the diversification of migration from that time. This coincided with the reform of what became the IOM in 1989 and the establishment of a dedicated EU migration policy in 1998 at the Tampere council summit.

Internationally, the European research community is complemented by the International Metropolis Conference, set up in 1996, which in 2017 was held in Den Haag and which gathers 500-900 participants including a strong contingency from Europe. Prof Jan Rath, also from the University of Amsterdam, currently holds the position of the European chair.

Over the years, migration studies have grown out of some initial disciplinary constraints in demography, geography, sociology, and history and have turned almost into a discipline of its own. This is reflected by the growing number of academic journals exclusively dedicated to migration studies, so far more than 20¹. However, it is still a comparably small field; not comparable with the main disciplines. The Web of Science currently lists twelve ‘migration journals’ under the category of ‘demography’, and currently the three most cited ones are International Migration Review, the Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies and International Migration. In addition a journal like Ethnic and Racial Studies, with many relevant contributions about migration, can be found under the Web of Science category of Anthropology.

Migration Studies in The Netherlands

Before 2015, migration studies in the Netherlands was a small academic domain. In academic circles the domain had few ‘migration professors’ in a limited number of specialized institutes, and the number of students with a major in demography and/or migration studies has always been very small. For specialists in this field it was not easy to get funding for substantial research projects, and this was even more so for specialists who wanted to do research connecting migration and development, or migration and education issues, with a brief exceptional period in the mid and late 1970s when the Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs asked three academic institutes to do research about the ‘guest workers’ and their home areas in Morocco, Turkey and Tunisia. After that, the Institute for Migration and Ethnic Studies at the University of Amsterdam (IMES) has done important work, with pioneers like Prof. Hans van Amersfoort, and Prof. Rinus Penninx; recently Prof. Hein de Haas – formerly at Oxford/COMPAS - was appointed as ‘migration professor’ at this same university.

Other universities in the Netherlands also deal with ‘migration research’, but often as part of broader disciplinary professorial chairs. In Maastricht University, Prof. Valentina Mazzucato has done innovative work connecting migration and development, while in Utrecht Prof. Annelies Zoomers and her staff did so as well, and In Leiden Dr Akinyinka Akinyoade, Dr Mayke Kaag and others at the African Studies Centre Leiden. Others focus more on immigration and integration issues, and on the long-term history of migration (and integration): Prof. Leo Lucassen and Prof. Marlou Schrover in Leiden, Prof. Maykel Verkuyten and Prof. Mérove Gijssberts in Utrecht, Prof. Henk van Houtum, in Nijmegen; Prof. Paul Scheffer, in Tilburg; and Em. Prof. Han Entzinger, Prof. Godfried Engbersen, Prof. Peter Scholten – the current director of IMISCOE - and Prof. Jaco Dagevos, at Erasmus University Rotterdam. The current Rector of the International Institute of Social Studies in The Hague (part of EUR), Prof. Inge Hutter, is a social demographer as well. There is also a specialized demography institute as part of the Royal Academy of Arts and Sciences (KNAW), NIDI, connected to Groningen University, and with Prof. Helga de Valk as one of the prominent researchers. During and after the ‘migration crisis’ of 2015/2016 suddenly these researchers were in high demand, and migration became one of the core issues of policy debates.

This overview of databases and bibliography

This overview brings together existing (current) databases on migration, and on education & development (and both with a special focus on Africa), and a selection of relevant books and articles about migration and development (focused on countries of origin, again with a focus on Africa) and migration and labour markets (focused on countries of destination). The bibliography can be used as an alphabetical list and as a topical list.

The documentation has been limited to ‘international migration’ (where people are being counted as migrants if they live/are registered in another country than where they have been born). However: two important remarks have to be made beforehand. The political debate in Europe focuses on intercontinental migration (e.g., from Africa to Europe). Most ‘international migrants’ stay within their continents, and this is even more true for refugees/forced migrants. And secondly: migration is much more than ‘international migration’. There are many more people whose geographical mobility did and does not cross state boundaries, but who went and go from the countryside to cities and metropolises, or who have moved between different rural areas, or between different cities. And ‘geographical movement’ is also much broader than changing domiciles. People also travel for work/business, social visits, religious purposes, and leisure/adventure.

For the databases on education, and migration, and for the literature on migration readers/users should be warned about the diversity and (often) lack of clarity about concepts and definitions. For education there is a bias towards ‘formal’ education and a neglect of informal types of skills development and religious education. For (international) migration it is obvious that ‘illegal’, or ‘unauthorized’, or ‘irregular’ migration escapes many databases, and often enters (scientific) literature as speculations.

The bibliography only refers to books, journal articles, and reports for which the URL could be found. Most titles can be found by using that URL. Some titles can only be found by making use of free access arrangements provided by universities (e.g. the library of the African Studies Centre Leiden/UBL), but that means a visit to that library. As a result of this approach some well-known books (and other publications) have not been included, because there is no free online access to those sources of information. Examples (in Dutch) are L. & J. Lucassen, Winnaars en Verliezers. Een nuchtere balans van vijfhonderd jaar immigratie (Amsterdam: Bert Bakker, 2011), H. van Houtum & L. Lucassen: Voorbij Fort Europa. Een nieuwe visie op migratie (Amsterdam, Atlas Contact, 2016) and P. Scheffer, Het land van aankomst (Amsterdam: De Bezige Bij, 2007). But also one of the most cited recent English-language books about migration has not been included, for the same reason: Castles, S., H. De Haas, & M.J. Miller (2013). The age of migration: International population movements in the modern world. Macmillan International Higher Education (with currently already more than 10,000 citations....).

We also only included a small selection of the articles in leading journals. To allow users of this webdossier to dive deeper, we have included a list of URLs of the major journals, and of the major research institutes and organizations. These are dominated by migration centres in Europe (all IMISCOE centres have been included), but we also tried to include relevant centres elsewhere, with a special attempt to link to centres in Africa: in Egypt, Ghana, Kenya, Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa, and Tunisia.

2 Databases on Education

African Education Research Database

The African Education Research Database has been developed by the Research for Equitable Access and Learning (REAL) Centre, Faculty of Education, University of Cambridge, in partnership with Education Sub Saharan Africa (ESSA). ESSA was founded in 2016 to join up, inform, inspire, focus and increase impact for everyone investing in education in sub-Saharan Africa.

Languages supported: English
 Geographical coverage: Sub-Saharan Africa
 Temporal coverage: Varies
 Raw data download: No
 Keywords: Education, learning, language, access

Eurostat

Eurostat contains European statistics on the following topics: participation in education and training, learning mobility, education personnel, education finance, education and training outcomes, languages, education-administrative data until 2012 and past series. The second link leads to the archived page on youth statistics for North Africa and the Eastern Mediterranean.

World Bank / EdStats

The website of the World Bank provides a broad overview of the main statistics, service delivery indicators, projects & operations, finances and indicators on education. Perhaps the best service is the Education Statistics, or EdStats. EdStats is a portal for comprehensive data and analysis source for key topics on education such as access, completion, learning, expenditures, policy, and equity. It is possible to search via indicators, countries, or themes.

2.1.1 For country information (all African countries):

Country portal of the African Studies Centre Leiden

The ASCL country portal provides a list of free internet resources and other information on Africa. It was initially set up for the general public but those with greater in-depth knowledge of Africa will also find some of the resources valuable. The ASCL country portal aims to present information on each African country at a glance. The internet resources have been selected by members of the ASCL staff.

<http://countryportal.ascleiden.nl/>

- Under 'General': the CIA World Fact Book (based on <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/>, with a lot of statistics about education in a country), and demographics -Wiki (based on <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki>, e.g. also data on educational expenditure)
- Under 'Economy': World Bank Statistical data (e.g. data on school enrolment; based on <https://data.worldbank.org/country/>)
- Under 'Development': International Human Development Indicators: UNDP data about the Human Development Index (with statistics about education, based on <http://hdr.undp.org/en/countries>), and also the International Institute of Education Planning (with a lot of sources from the country itself, based on <http://planipolis.iiep.unesco.org>)
- Under 'Other data and statistics':
 - United Nations Data (a.o., about education, based on <http://data.un.org/en/index.html>)
 - Zanran (based on <http://www.zanran.com>: many sources about education if you type the name of the country and 'education'; this also includes local sources)
 - OpendataforAfrica (some data about education if you search for 'education'; also sometimes about the country's subregions; based on <http://dataportal.opendataforafrica.org/>)
 - Often: a link with the data of the National Bureau of Statistics (and their education data)
- Under 'Publications': World Bank Group Open Knowledge Repository, (<https://openknowledge.worldbank.org>; a.o. on education).

2.1.2 Other sources of online information:

ADEA (Association for the Development of Education in Africa / Association pour le Développement de l'Éducation en Afrique)

The Association for the Development of Education in Africa (ADEA) is a pan-African institution, established in 1988. It is primarily a forum for educational policy dialogue. The website contains a large number of publications, newsletters, policy briefs, bulletins, and more.

<http://www.adeanet.org/en>; <http://www.adeanet.org/fr>

African Development Bank

The African Development Bank is active in the field of education and is involved in projects and so-called 'knowledge products', i.e. an analysis of a national education sector. The website contains information on both items, in addition to news reports, useful links and documents.

<https://www.afdb.org/en/topics-and-sectors/sectors/education/>

African Studies Centre Leiden

The ASCL has published two thematic maps about education and skills development in Africa, one together with ICLON, and one together with NUFFIC. Its (digital) library contains many books and articles about education in Africa, and has published a web dossier about 'education for life' in Africa.

International Organization for Migration (IOM), online bookstore.

IOM produces a large number of publications, including the World Migration Report, Migration Profiles, and various books, studies and reports, journals, manuals and handbooks, information sheets, flyers and thematic catalogues. The IOM online bookstore, launched in 2009, facilitates access to IOM publications, allowing users to download publications free of charge or to buy them. Pre-defined subject areas include ‘education’. Searches can also be carried out with free terms.

NationMaster – Middle East and North Africa: Education stats

This website contains statistics on a diverse set of indicators related to education, including: literacy, average years of schooling, primary education, pupil-teacher ratio, and children out of schools. Within each indicator it is possible to view individual country statistics.

<http://www.nationmaster.com/country-info/groups/Middle-Eastern-and-North-Africa/Education>

Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD)

The OECD's work on education aims to help individuals and nations to identify and develop the knowledge and skills that drive better jobs and better lives, generate prosperity and promote social inclusion. Areas of work include: Measuring outcomes; Teaching and learning; Development and using skills; Policy development and implementation; Innovation and the future of education.
